

Staatl. Bibliothek
Regensburg

H. 5251 (7)

THE SPECTATOR.

IN EIGHT VOLUMES.

Carefully Revised and Corrected.

VOLUME SEVENTH.

L O N D O N:

Printed for D. Williams and P. Dods in the Strand.

MDCCLXV.

Re

1871

REPORT OF THE

1871

OF THE

COMMISSIONERS OF THE

OF THE

1871

T O

Mr METHUEN.

S I R,

IT is with very great pleasure I take an opportunity of publishing the gratitude I owe you, for the place you allow me in your friendship and familiarity. I will not acknowledge to you that I have often had you in my thoughts, when I have endeavoured to draw, in some parts of these discourses, the character of a good-natured, honest and accomplished gentleman. But such representations give my reader an idea of a person blameless only, or only laudable for such perfections as extend no farther than to his own private advantage and reputation.

DEDICATION.

BUT when I speak of you, I celebrate one who has had the happiness of possessing also those qualities which make a man useful to society, and of having had opportunities likewise of exerting them in the most conspicuous manner.

THE great part you had as British ambassador, in procuring and cultivating the advantageous commerce between the courts of England and Portugal, has purchased you the lasting esteem of all who understand the interest of either nation.

THOSE personal excellencies which are over-rated by the ordinary world, and too much neglected by wise men, you have applied with the utmost skill and judgment. The most graceful address in horsemanship, in the use of the sword, and in dancing, has been employed by you as lower arts, and as they have occasionally served to cover, or introduce the talents of a skilful minister.

DEDICATION.

BUT your abilities have not appeared only in one nation. When it was your province to act as her Majesty's minister at the court of Savoy, at that time encamped, you accompanied that gallant prince through all the vicissitudes of his fortune, and shared, by his side, the dangers of that glorious day in which he recovered his capital. As far as it regards personal qualities, you attained, in that one hour, the highest military reputation. The behaviour of our minister in the action, and the good offices done the vanquished in the name of the Queen of England, gave both the conqueror and the captive the most lively examples of the courage and generosity of the nation he represented.

YOUR friends and companions in your absence frequently talk these things of you, and you cannot hide from us, (by the most discreet silence in any thing which regards yourself) that the frank entertainment we have at your table, your easy condescension in little incidents of mirth and diversion, and general complacency of manners, are far from being the greatest obligations we have to you. I do assure you there is not one of your friends has a greater sense of your merit in general, and of the favours you every day do us, than,

DEDICATION.

S I R,

Your most obedient, and most humble servant,

RICHARD STEELE.

T H E
S P E C T A T O R.

VOLUME THE SEVENTH.

No. 474. Wednesday, September 3. 1712.

Asperitas agrestis inconcinna—

HOR. Ep. 18. l. 1. v. 6.

Rustic, inelegant, uncouth,

With shaggy beard, and nasty tooth.

FRANCIS.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ BEING of the number of those that have lately ‘ retired from the centre of business and plea‘ sure, my uneasiness in the country where I am, arises ‘ rather from the society than the solitude of it. To ‘ be obliged to receive and return visits from and to a ‘ circle of neighbours, who, through diversity of age ‘ or inclinations, can neither be entertaining or ser‘ viceable to us, is a vile loss of time, and a slavery, ‘ from which a man should deliver himself, if possible:
‘ for why must I lose the remaining part of my life, ‘ because they have thrown away the former part of ‘ theirs? It is to me an insupportable affliction, to be ‘ tormented with the narrations of a set of people, who ‘ are warm in their expressions of the quick relish of ‘ that pleasure which their dogs and horses have a ‘ more delicate taste of. I do also in my heart de‘ test and abhor that damnable doctrine and position ‘ of the necessity of a bumper, though to one’s own ‘ toast; for though it is pretended that these deep po‘ tations are used only to inspire gaiety, they certainly ‘ drown the chearfulness that would survive a mode‘ rate circulation. If at these meetings it were left to ‘ every stranger either to fill his glass according to his ‘ own inclination, or to make his retreat when he finds ‘ he has been sufficiently obedient to that of others, ‘ these entertainments would be governed with more ‘ good sense, and consequently with more good breed‘ ing, than at present they are. Indeed where any of ‘ the guests are known to measure their fame or plea‘ sure by their glass, proper exhortations might be used ‘ to these to push their fortunes in this sort of reputa‘ tion; but where ’tis unseasonably insisted on to a modest ‘ stranger, this drench may be said to be swallowed ‘ with the same necessity, as if it had been tendered ‘ in the horn for that purpose, with this aggravat‘ ing circumstance, that it distresses the entertainer’s ‘ guest in the same degree as it relieves his horses.

‘ To attend without impatience an account of five-‘ barred gates, double-ditches, and precipices, and to ‘ survey the orator with desiring eyes, is to me ex‘ tremely difficult, but absolutely necessary, to be up‘ on tolerable terms with him; but then the occasi‘ onal bursting out into laughter, is of all other ac‘ complishments the most requisite. I confess at pre‘ sent, I have not the command of these convulsions, ‘ as is necessary to be good company: therefore I beg ‘ you would publish this letter, and let me be known all ‘ at once for a queer fellow, and avoided. It is mon‘ strous to me, that we, who are given to reading and ‘ calm conversation, should ever be visited by these ‘roarers : but they think, they themselves, as neighbours, may come into our rooms, with the same right that they and their dogs hunt in our grounds.

‘Your institution of Clubs I have always admired, in which you constantly endeavoured the union of the metaphorically defunct, that is, such as are neither serviceable to the busy and enterprising part of mankind, nor entertaining to the retired and speculative. There should certainly therefore in each county be established a club of the persons whose conversations I have described, who, for their own private, as also the public emolument, should exclude and be excluded all other society. Their attire should be the same with their huntsmen’s, and none should be admitted into this green conversation piece, except he had broke his collar bone thrice. A broken rib or two might also admit a man without the least opposition. The president must necessarily have broken his neck, and have been taken up dead once or twice : for the more maims this brotherhood shall have met with, the easier will their conversation flow and keep up ; and when any of these vigorous invalids had finished his narration of the collar bone, this naturally would introduce the history of the ribs. Besides, the different circumstances of their falls and fractures would help to prolong and diversify their relations. There should also be another club of such men, who have not succeeded so well in maiming themselves, but are however in the constant pursuit of these accomplishments. I would by no means be suspected by what I have said to traduce in general the body of fox-hunters ; for whilst I look upon a reasonable creature full speed after a pack of dogs, by way of pleasure, and not of business, I shall always make honourable mention of it.

‘But the most irksome conversation of all others I have met with in the neighbourhood, has been a-among two or three of your travellers, who have overlooked men and manners, and have passed thro' France and Italy, with the same observation that the carriers and stage-coachmen do through Great Britain; that is, their stops and stages have been regulated according to the liquor they have met with in their passage. They indeed remember the names of abundance of places, with the particular fineries of certain churches; but their distinguishing mark is certain prettinesses of foreign languages, the meaning of which they could have better expressed in their own. The entertainment of these fine observers, Shakespear has described to consist

In talking of the Alps and Apennines,
The Pyrenean, and the river Po.

And then concludes with a sigh,

Now this is worshipful society!

I would not be thought in all this to hate such honest creatures as dogs; I am only unhappy that I cannot partake in their diversions. But I love them so well, as dogs, that I often go with my pockets stuffed with bread to dispense my favours, or make my way through them at neighbours' houses. There is in particular a young hound of expectation, vivacity and enterprise, that attends my flights wherever he spies me. This creature observes my countenance, and behaves himself accordingly. His mirth, his frolic, and joy upon the sight of me has been observed, and I have been gravely desired not to encourage him so much, for it spoils his parts; but I think he shews them sufficiently in the several boundings, friskings, and scourings, when he makes his court to me: but I foresee in a little time he and I must keep company with one another only, for we are fit for no other in these parts. Having inform‘ed you how I do pass my time in the country where ‘I am, I must proceed to tell you how I would pass ‘it, had I such a fortune as would put me above the ‘observance of ceremony and custom.

‘My scheme of a country life then should be as fol‘lows. As I am happy in three or four very agree‘able friends, these I would have continually with ‘me; and the freedom we took with one another at ‘school and the university we would maintain and ex‘ert upon all occasions with great courage. There ‘should be certain hours of the day to be employed ‘in reading, during which time it should be impos‘sible for any one of us to enter into another’s cham‘ber, unless by storm. After this we would commu‘nicate the trash or treasure we had met with, with ‘our own reflexions upon the matter; the justness of ‘which we would controvert with good-natured ‘warmth, and never spare one another, out of that ‘complaisant spirit of conversation, which makes o‘thers affirm and deny the same matter in a quarter ‘of an hour. If any of the neighbouring gentlemen, ‘not of our turn, should take it in their heads to visit ‘me, I should look upon these persons in the same de‘gree enemies to my particular state of happiness, as ‘ever the French were to that of the public, and I ‘would be at an annual expence in spies to observe ‘their motions. Whenever I should be surprized with ‘a visit, as I hate drinking, I would be brisk in swill-‘ing bumpers, upon this maxim, that it is better to ‘trouble others with my impertinence, than to be ‘troubled myself with theirs. The necessity of an in‘firmity makes me resolved to fall into that project;
‘and as we should be but five, the terrors of an invo‘luntary separation, which our number cannot so ‘well admit of, would make us exert ourselves in op‘position to all the particulars mentioned in your in‘stitution of that equitable confinement. This my ‘way of life I know would subject me to the imputa-

' tion of a morose, covetous, and singular fellow.
 ' These and all other hard words, with all manner of ' insipid jests, and all other reproach, would be mat' ter of mirth to me and my friends; besides, I would ' destroy the application of the epithets morose and
 ' covetous, by a yearly relief of my undeservedly ne-
 ' cessitous neighbours, and by treating my friends and ' domestics with an humanity that should express the ' obligation to lie rather on my side; and as for the ' word singular, I was always of opinion that every ' man must be so, to be what one would desire him,

Your very humble servant,

J. R.

Mr SPECTATOR,

' ABOUT two years ago, I was called upon by the
 ' A younger part of a country family, by my mo' ther's side related to me, to visit Mr Campbell, the ' dumb-man; for they told me that that was chiefly
 ' what brought them to town, having heard wonders
 ' of him in Essex. I, who always wanted faith in mat' ters of that kind, was not easily prevailed on to go;
 ' but lest they should take it ill, I went with them;
 ' when to my surprise, Mr Campbell related all their ' past life, (in short, had he not been prevented, such
 ' a discovery would have come out as would have ruin' ed the next design of their coming to town, viz. buy' ing wedding-cloaths.) Our names——though he ' never heard of us before——and we endeavoured to ' conceal——were as familiar to him as to ourselves.
 ' To be sure, Mr SPECTATOR, he is a very learned ' and wise-man. Being impatient to know my for' tune, having paid my respects in a family-Jacobus,
 ' he told me (after his manner) among several other ' things, that in a year and nine months I should fall
 ' ill of a fever, be given over by my physicians, but ' should with much difficulty recover: that the first ' time I took the air afterwards, I should be addressed
 ' to by a young gentleman of a plentiful fortune,

‘good sense, and a generous spirit. Mr SPECTATOR, ‘he is the purest man in the world, for all he said is ‘come to pass, and I am the happiest she in Kent. I ‘have been in quest of Mr Campbell these three months, ‘and cannot find him out. Now hearing you are a ‘dumb man too, I thought you might correspond,
 ‘and be able to tell me something; for I think myself ‘highly obliged to make his fortune, as he has mine.
 ‘’Tis very possible your worship, who has spies all o‘ver this town, can inform me how to send to him:
 ‘if you can, I beseech you to be as speedy as possible,
 ‘and you will highly oblige

Your constant reader and admirer,

DULCIBELLA THANKLEY.

ORDERED; That the inspector I employ about wonders, inquire at the Golden-Lion, opposite to the Half-Moon tavern in Drury-Lane, into the merits of this silent sage, and report accordingly. T

No. 475.

Thursday, September 4.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

—Quæ res in se neque consilium neque modum Habet ullum, eam consilio regere non potes. TER.

Advice is thrown away, where the case admits of neither counsel nor moderation.

IT is an old observation, which has been made of politicians who would rather ingratiate themselves with their sovereign, than promote his real service, that they accommodate their counsels to his inclinations, and advise him to such actions only as his heart is naturally set upon. The privy-counsellor of one in love must observe the same conduct, unless he would forfeit

the friendship of the person who desires his advice. I have known several odd cases of this nature. Hipparchus was going to marry a common woman, but being resolved to do nothing without the advice of his friend Philander, he consulted him upon the occasion. Philander told him his mind freely, and represented his mistress to him in such strong colours, that the next morning he received a challenge for his pains, and before twelve o'clock was run thro' the body by the man who had asked his advice. Celia was more prudent on the like occasion; she desired Leonilla to give her opinion freely upon a young fellow who made his addresses to her. Leonilla, to oblige her, told her with great frankness that she looked upon him as one of the most worthless ——— Celia, foreseeing what a character she was to expect, begged her not to go on, for that she had been privately married to him above a fortnight. The truth of it is, a woman seldom asks advice before she has bought her wedding cloaths. When she has made her own choice, for form's sake, she sends a Conge d'Eline to her friends.

IF we look into the secret springs and motives that set people at work on these occasions, and put them upon asking advice which they never intend to take; I look upon it to be none of the least, that they are incapable of keeping a secret which is so very pleasing to them. A girl longs to tell her confident that she hopes to be married in a little time, and, in order to talk of the pretty fellow that dwells so much in her thoughts, asks her very gravely, what she would advise her to do in a case of so much difficulty. Why else should Melissa, who had not a thousand pounds in the world, go into every quarter of the town to ask her acquaintance whether they would advise her to take Tom Townley, that made his addresses to her with an estate of five thousand a year? It was very pleasant, on this occasion, to hear the lady propose her doubts, and to see the pains she is at to get over them.

I MUST not here omit a practice that is in use among the vainer part of our own sex, who will often ask a friend's advice in relation to a fortune whom they are never likely to come at. WILL HONEYCOMBE, who is now on the verge of threescore, took me aside not long since, and asked me in his most serious look, whether I would advise him to marry my lady Betty Single, who, by the way, is one of the greatest fortunes about town. I stared him full in the face upon so strange a question; upon which he immediately gave me an inventory of her jewels and estate, adding, that he was resolved to do nothing in a matter of such consequence without my approbation. Finding he would have an answer, I told him, if he could get the lady's consent, he had mine. This is about the tenth match which, to my knowledge, WILL has consulted his friends upon, without ever opening his mind to the party herself.

I HAVE been engaged in this subject by the following letter, which comes to me from some notable young female scribe, who, by the contents of it, seems to have carried matters so far, that she is ripe for asking advice; but as I would not lose her good-will, nor forfeit the reputation which I have with her for wisdom, I shall only communicate the letter to the public, without returning any answer to it.

Mr SPECTATOR,

NOW, Sir, the thing is this: Mr Shapely is the prettiest gentleman about town. He is very tall, but not too tall neither. He dances like an angel. His mouth is made I don't know how, but it is the prettiest that I ever saw in my life. He is always laughing, for he has an infinite deal of wit. If you did but see how he rolls his stockings! He has a thousand pretty fancies, and I am sure, if you saw him, you would like him. He is a very good scholar, and can talk Latin as fast as English. I wish

‘ you could but see him dance. Now you must understand ‘ poor Mr Shapely has no estate; but how can he help ‘ that, you know? And yet my friends are so unreason‘ able as to be always teasing me about him, because he ‘ has no estate; but I am sure he has that that is bet‘ ter than an estate; for he is a good natured, ingeni‘ ous, modest, civil, tall, well bred, handsome man;
‘ and I am obliged to him for his civilities ever since I ‘ saw him. I forgot to tell you, that he has black ‘ eyes, and looks upon me now and then as if he had ‘ tears in them. And yet my friends are so unreason‘ able that they would have me be uncivil to him. I ‘ have a good portion which they cannot hinder me
‘ of, and I shall be fourteen on the 29th day of August ‘ next, and am therefore willing to settle in the world ‘ as soon as I can, and so is Mr Shapely. But every bo‘ dy I advise with here is poor Mr Shapely’s enemy. I ‘ desire therefore you will give me your advice, for I ‘ know you are a wise man; and if you advise me well, ‘ I am resolved to follow it. I heartily wish you could ‘ see him dance, and am,

S I R,

C

Your most humble servant,

B. D.

‘ He loves your Spectators mightily.

No. 476. Friday, September 5.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

—Lucidus ordo.

HOR.

Method.

A MONG my daily papers which I bestow on the public, there are some which are written with regularity and method, and others that run out into the wildness of those compositions which go by the name of Essays. As for the first, I have the whole scheme of the discourse in my mind before I set pen to paper. In the other kind of writing, it is sufficient that I have several thoughts on a subject, without troubling myself to range them in such order, that they may seem to grow out of one another, and be disposed under their proper heads. Seneca and Montaigne are patterns for writing in this last kind, as Tully and Aristotle excel in the other. When I read an author of genius who writes without method, I fancy myself in a wood that abounds with a great many noble objects, rising among one another, in the greatest confusion and disorder. When I read a methodical discourse, I am in a regular plantation, and can place myself in its several centres, so as to take a view of all the lines and walks that are struck from them. You may ramble in the one a whole day together, and every moment discover something or other that is new to you; but when you have done, you will have but a confused imperfect notion of the place: in the other your eye commands the whole prospect, and gives you such an idea of it, as is not easily worn out of the memory.

IRREGULARITY and want of method, are only supportable in men of great learning or genius, who are often too full to be exact, and therefore chuse to throw down their pearls in heaps before the reader, rather than be at the pains of stringing them.

METHOD is of advantage to a work, both in respect to the writer and the reader. In regard to the first, it is a great help to his invention. When a man has planned his discourse, he finds a great many thoughts rising out of every head, that do not offer themselves upon the general survey of a subject. His thoughts are at the same time more intelligible, and better discover their drift and meaning, when they are placed in their proper lights, and follow one another in a regular series, than when they are thrown together without order and connexion. There is always an obscurity in confusion, and the same sentence that would have enlightened the reader in one part of the discourse, perplexes him in another. For the same reason likewise every thought in a methodical discourse shews itself in its greatest beauty, as the several figures in a piece of painting receive new grace from their disposition in the picture. The advantages of a reader from a methodical discourse, are correspondent with those of the writer. He comprehends every thing easily, takes it in with pleasure, and retains it long.

METHOD is not less requisite in ordinary conversation than in writing, provided a man would talk to make himself understood. I, who hear a thousand coffee-house debates every day, am very sensible of this want of method in the thoughts of my honest countrymen. There is not one dispute in ten which is managed in those schools of politics, where, after the three first sentences, the question is not entirely lost. Our disputants put me in mind of the skuttle-fish, that when he is unable to extricate himself, blackens all the water about him till he becomes invisible. The man who does not know how to methodize his thoughts, has always, to borrow a phrase from the Dispensary, a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves.

TOM PUZZLE is one of the most eminent immethodical disputants of any that has fallen under my observation. Tom has read enough to make him very impertinent; his knowledge is sufficient to raise doubts, but not to clear them. It is pity that he has so much learning, or that he has not a great deal more. With these qualifications Tom sets up for a free-thinker, finds a great many things to blame in the constitution of his country, and gives shrewd intimations that he does not believe another world. In short, Puzzle is an atheist as much as his parts will give him leave. He has got about half a dozen common place topics, into which he never fails to turn the conversation, whatever was the occasion of it: though the matter in debate be about Doway or Denain, it is ten to one but half his discourse runs upon the unreasonableness of bigotry and priestcraft. This makes Mr Puzzle the admiration of all those who have less sense than himself, and the contempt of all those who have more. There is none in town whom Tom dreads so much as my friend Will Dry. Will, who is acquainted with Tom's logic, when he finds him running off the question, cuts him short with a What then? We allow all this to be true, but what is it to our present purpose? I have known Tom eloquent half an hour together, and triumphing, as he thought, in the superiority of the argument, when he has been nonplus'd on a sudden by Mr Dry's desiring him to tell the company what it was that he endeavoured to prove. In short, Dry is a man of a clear methodical head, but few words, and gains the same advantages over Puzzle, that a small body of regular troops would gain over a numberless undisciplined militia.

No. 477. Saturday, September 6.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

— *An me ludit amabilis
Insania? audire et videor pios
Errare per lucos, amœna Quos et aquæ subeunt et auræ.*

HOR. Od. 4. l. 3. v. 5.

*Hark! the celestial voice I raptur'd hear?
Or does a pleasing frenzy charm my ear?
Thro' hallow'd groves I stray, where streams beneath
From lucid fountains flow, and zephyrs balmy breathe.*
FRANCIS.

S I R,

HAVING lately read your essay on the pleasures of the imagination, I was so taken with your thoughts upon some of our English gardens, that I cannot forbear troubling you with a letter upon that subject. I am one, you must know, who am looked upon as an humourist in gardening. I have several acres about my house, which I call my garden, and which a skilful gardener would not know what to call. It is a confusion of kitchen and parterre, orchard and flower garden, which lie so mixed and interwoven with one another, that if a foreigner, who had seen nothing of our country, should be conveyed into my garden at his first landing, he would look upon it as a natural wilderness, and one of the uncultivated parts of our country. My flowers grow up in several parts of the garden in the greatest luxuriancy and profusion. I am so far from being fond of any particular one, by reason of its rarity; that if I meet with any one in a field which pleases me, I give it a place in my garden. By this means, when a stranger walks with me, he is surprized to see several large spots of ground covered with ten thousand different colours, and has often singled out flowers that he might have met with under a common hedge, in a field, or in a meadow, as some of the greatest beauties of the place. The only method I observe in this particular, is to range in the same quarter the products of the same season, that they may make their appearance together, and compose a picture of the greatest variety. There is the same irregularity in my plantations, which run into as great a wildness as their natures will permit. I take in none that do not naturally rejoice in the soil, and am pleased when I am walking in a labyrinth of my own raising, not to know whether the next tree I shall meet with is an apple or an oak, an elm or a pear-tree. My kitchen has likewise its particular quarters assigned it; for besides the wholesome luxury which that place abounds with, I have always thought a kitchen garden a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery, or artificial green-house. I love to see every thing in its perfection, and am more pleased to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages, with a thousand nameless pot-herbs, springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats, or withering in an air and soil that are not adapted to them. I must not omit, that there is a fountain rising in the upper part of my garden, which forms a little wandering rill, and administers to the pleasure as well as the plenty of the place. I have so conducted it, that it visits most of my plantations; and have taken particular care to let it run in the same manner as it would do in an open field, so that it generally passes through banks of violets and primroses, plats of willow, or other plants, that seem to be of its own producing. There is another circumstance in which I am very particular, or, as my neighbours calls me, very whimsical: as my garden invites into it all the birds of the country, by offering them the conveniency of springs and shades, solitude and shelter, I do not suffer any one to destroy their nests in the spring, or drive them from their usual haunts in fruit-time. I value my garden more for being full of black-birds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their songs. By this means I have always the music of the season in its perfection, and am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks, and shooting before my eye across the several little glades and alleys that I pass through. I think there are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: your makers of parterres and flower-gardens, are epigrammatists and sonneteers in this art: contrivers of bowers and grottos, treillages and cascades, are romance-writers. Wise and London are our heroic poets: and if, as a critic, I may single out any passage of their works to commend, I shall take notice of that part in the upper garden, at Kensington, which was at first nothing but a gravel pit. It must have been a fine genius for gardening, that could have thought of forming such an unsightly hollow into so beautiful an area, and to have hit the eye with so uncommon and agreeable a scene as that which it is now wrought into. To give this particular spot of ground the greater effect, they have made a very pleasant contrast; for as on one side of the walk you see this hollow basin, with its several little plantations, lying so conveniently under the eye of the beholder; on the other side of it there appears a seeming mount, made up of trees rising one higher than another in proportion as they approach the center. A spectator, who has not heard this account of it, would think this circular mount was not only a real one, but that it had been actually scooped out of that hollow space which I have before mentioned. I never yet met with any one who had walked in this garden, who was not struck with that part of it which I have here mentioned. As for myself, you will find, by the account which I have already given you, that my compositions in gardening are altogether after the Pindaric manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of art. What I am now going to mention, will perhaps deserve your attention more than any thing I have yet said. I find that in the discourse which I spoke of at the beginning of my letter, you are against filling an English garden with evergreens; and indeed I am so far of your opinion, that I can by no means think the verdure of an evergreen comparable to that which shoots out annually, and clothes our trees in the summer season. But I have often wondered that those who are like myself, and love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter-garden, which would consist of such trees only as never cast their leaves. We have very often little snatches of sunshine and fair weather in the most uncomfortable parts of the year, and have frequently several days in November and January that are as agreeable as any in the finest months. At such times, therefore, I think there could not be a greater pleasure, than to walk in such a winter-garden as I have proposed. In the summer-season the whole country blooms, and is a kind of garden, for which reason we are not so sensible of those beauties that at this time may be every where met with; but when nature is in her desolation, and presents us with nothing but bleak and barren prospects, there is something unspeakably chearful in a spot of ground which is covered with trees that smile amidst all the rigour of winter and give us a view of the most gay season in the midst of that which is the most dead and melancholy. I have so far indulged myself in this thought, that I have set apart a whole acre of ground for the executing of it. The walls are covered with ivy instead of vines. The laurel, the hornbeam, and the holly, with many other trees and plants of the same nature, grow so thick in it, that you cannot imagine a more lively scene. The glowing redness of the berries with which they are hung at this time, vies with the verdure of their leaves, and are apt to inspire the heart of the beholder with that vernal delight, which you have somewhere taken notice of in your former papers. It is very pleasant, at the same time, to see the several kinds of birds retiring into this little green spot, and enjoying themselves among the branches and foliage, when my great garden, which I have before mentioned to you, does not afford a single leaf for their shelter.

You must know, Sir, that I look upon the pleasure which we take in a garden, as one of the most innocent delights in human life. A garden was the habitation of our first parents before the fall. It is naturally apt to fill the mind with calmness and tranquillity, and to lay all its turbulent passions at rest. It gives us a great insight into the contrivance and wisdom of Providence, and suggests innumerable subjects for meditation. I cannot but think the very complacency and satisfaction which a man takes in these works of nature, to be a laudable, if not a virtuous habit of mind. For all which reasons I hope you will pardon the length of my present letter. C

I am,

SIR, &c.

No. 478. Monday, September 8.

—Usus,

Quem penes arbitrium est, & jus & norma—

HOR. Ars poet. v. 72.

Fashion, the arbiter, and rule of right. FRANCIS.

MR SPECTATOR,

IT happened lately, that a friend of mine, who had many things to buy for his family. would oblige me to walk with him to the shops. He was very nice in his way, and fond of having every thing shewn, which at first made me very uneasy; but as his humour still continued, the things which I had been staring at along with him, began to fill my head, and led me into a set of amusing thoughts concerning them.

I FANCIED it must be very surprising to any one who enters into a detail of fashions, to consider how far the vanity of mankind has laid itself out in dress, what a prodigious number of people it maintains, and what a circulation of money it occasions. Providence in this case makes use of the folly which we will not give up, and it becomes instrumental to the support of those who are willing to labour. Hence it is that fringe-makers, lace-men, tire-women, and a number of other trades, which would be useless in a simple state of nature, draw their subsistence; though it is seldom seen that such as these are extremely rich, because their original fault of being founded upon vanity, keeps them poor by the light inconstancy of its nature. The variableness of fashion turns the stream of business which flows from it now into one channel, and anon into another; so that the different sets of people sink or flourish in their turns by it.

FROM the shops we retired to the tavern, where I found my friend express so much satisfaction for the bargains he had made, that my moral reflexions (if I had told them) might have passed for a reproof: so I chose rather to fall in with him, and let the discourse run upon the use of fashions.

HERE we remembered how much man is governed by his senses, how lively he is struck by the objects which appear to him in an agreeable manner, how much cloaths contribute to make us agreeable objects, and how much we owe it to ourselves that we should appear so.

WE considered man as belonging to societies; societies as formed of different ranks; and different ranks distinguished by habits, that all proper duty or respect might attend their appearance.

WE took notice of several advantages which are met with in the occurrences of conversation. How the bashful man has been sometimes so raised, as to express himself with an air of freedom, when he imagines that his habit introduces him to company with a becoming manner: and again, how a fool in fine clothes shall be suddenly heard with attention till he has betrayed himself; whereas a man of sense appearing with a dress of negligence shall be but coldly received, till he be proved by time, and established in a character. Such things as these we could recollect to have happened to our own knowledge so very often, that we concluded the author had his reasons, who advised his son to go in dress rather above his fortune than under it.

AT last the subject seemed so considerable, that it was proposed to have a repository built for fashions, as there are chambers for medals and other rarities. The building may be shaped as that which stands among the pyramids, in the form of a woman's head. This may be raised upon pillars, whose ornament shall bear a just relation to the design. Thus there may be an imitation of fringe carved in the base, a sort of appearance of lace in the frieze, and a representation of curling locks, with bows of ribbon sloping over them, may fill up the work of the cornish. The inside may be divided into two apartments appropriated to each sex. The apartments may be filled with shelves, on which boxes are to stand as regularly as books in a library. These are to have folding doors, which being opened, you are to behold a baby dressed out in some fashion which has flourished, and standing upon a pedestal, where the time of its reign is marked down. For its farther regulation, let it be ordered, that every one who invents a fashion shall bring in his box, whose front he may at pleasure have either worked or painted with some amorous or gay device, that, like books with gilded leaves and covers, it may the sooner draw the eyes of the beholders. And to the end that these may be preserved with all due care, let there be a keeper appointed, who shall be a gentleman qualified with a competent knowledge in cloaths: so that by this means the place will be a comfortable support for some beau who has spent his estate in dressing.

THE reasons offered by which we expect to gain the approbation of the public, were as follows.

FIRST, That every one who is considerable enough to be a mode, and has any imperfection of nature or chance, which it is possible to hide by the advantage of clothes, may, by coming to this repository, be furnished herself, and furnish all who are under the same misfortune, with the most agreeable manner of concealing it; and that on the other side, every one who has any beauty in face or shape, may also be furnished with the most agreeable manner of shewing it.

SECONDLY, That whereas some of our young gentlemen who travel, give us great reason to suspect that they only go abroad to make or improve a fancy for dress, a project of this nature may be a means to keep them at home, which is in effect the keeping of so much money in the kingdom. And perhaps the balance of fashion in Europe, which now leans upon the side of France, may be so altered for the future, that it may become as common with Frenchmen to come to England for their finishing stroke of breeding, as it has been for Englishmen to go to France for it.

THIRDLY, Whereas several great scholars, who might have been otherwise useful to the world, have spent their time in studying to describe the dresses of the ancients from dark hints, which they are fain to interpret and support with much learning; it will from henceforth happen, that they shall be freed from the trouble, and the world from useless volumes. This project will be a registry, to which posterity may have recourse, for the clearing such obscure passages as tend that way in authors; and therefore we shall not for the future submit ourselves to the learning of etymology, which might persuade the age to come, that the farthingal was worn for cheapness, or the furbelow for warmth.

FOURTHLY, Whereas they who are old themselves, have often a way of railing at the extravagance of youth, and the whole age in which their children live; it is hoped that this ill humour will be much suppressed, when we can have recourse to the fashions of their times, produce them in our vindication, and be able to shew that it might have been as expensive in Queen Elizabeth's time only to wash and quill a ruff, as it is now to buy cravats or neck-handkerchiefs.

WE desire also to have it taken notice of, That because we would shew a particular respect to foreigners, which may induce them to perfect their breeding here in a knowledge which is very proper for pretty gentlemen, we have conceived the motto for the house in the learned language. There is to be a picture over the door with a looking-glass and a dressing-chair in the middle of it: then on one side are to be seen, above one another, patch boxes, pin-cushions, and little bottles: on the other, powder bags, puffs, combs and brushes: beyond these, swords with fine knots, whose points are hidden, and fans almost closed, with the handles downward, are to stand out interchangeably from the sides, till they meet at the top, and form a semicircle over the rest of the figures: beneath all, the writing is to run in this pretty founding manner:

*Adeste, O quotquot sunt, Veneres, Gratiae, Cupidines, En vobis adsunt in promptu
Faces, vincula, spicula, Hinc eligite, sumite, regite.*

All ye Venuses, Graces, and Cupids, attend:

See prepar'd to your hands

Darts, torches, and bands:

Your weapons here chuse, and your empire extend.

I am, S I R,

Your most humble servant, A. B.

THE proposal of my correspondent I cannot but look upon as an ingenious method of placing persons (whose parts make them ambitious to exert themselves in frivolous things) in a rank by themselves. In order to this, I would propose that there be a board of directors of the fashionable society; and because it is a matter of too much weight for a private man to determine alone, I should be highly obliged to my correspondents if they would give in lists of persons qualified for this trust. If the chief coffee-houses, the conversations of which places are carried on by persons, each of whom has his little number of followers and admirers, would name from among themselves two or three to be inserted, they should be put up with great faithfulness. Old beaus are to be presented in the first place; but as that sect, with relation to dress, is almost extinct, it will, I fear, be absolutely necessary to take in all time servers, properly so deemed; that is, such as, without any conviction of conscience, or view of interest, change with the world, and that merely from a terror of being out of fashion. Such also, who, from facility of temper, and too much obsequiousness, are vicious against their will, and follow leaders whom they do not approve, for want of courage to go their own way, are capable persons for this superintendency. Those who are loth to grow old, or would do any thing contrary to the course and order of things, out of fondness to be in fashion, are proper candidates. To conclude, those who are in fashion without apparent merit, must be supposed to have latent qualities, which would appear in a post of direction; and therefore are to be regarded in forming these lists. Any who shall be pleased according to these, or what farther qualifications may occur to himself, to send a list, is desired to do it within fourteen days after this date.

N. B. The place of the physician to this society, according to the last mentioned qualification, is already engaged. T

No. 479. Tuesday, September 9.

—Dare jura maritis. HOR. Ars poet. v. 398.

With equal rites the wedded couple blest. FRANCIS.

MANY are the epistles I every day receive from husbands, who complain of vanity, pride, but above all, ill nature in their wives. I cannot tell how it is, but I think I see in all their letters that the cause of their uneasiness is in themselves; and indeed I have hardly ever observed the married condition unhappy, but for want of judgment or temper in the man.

The truth is, we generally make love in a stile, and with sentiments very unfit for ordinary life: they are half theatrical, half romantic. By this means we raise our imaginations to what is not to be expected in human life; and because we did not before-hand think of the creature we were enamoured of, as subject to dishumour, age, sickness, impatience, or fullness, but altogether considered her as the object of joy, human nature itself is often imputed to her as her particular imperfection or defect.

I TAKE it to be a rule proper to be observed in all occurrences of life, but more especially in the domestic or matrimonial part of it, to preserve always a disposition to be pleased. This cannot be supported but by considering things in their right light, and as nature has formed them, and not as our own fancies and appetites would have them. He then who took a young lady to his bed, with no other consideration than the expectation of scenes of dalliance, and thought of her (as I said before) only as she was to administer to the gratification of desire, as that desire flags, will, without her fault, think her charms and her merit abated: from hence must follow indifference, dislike, peevishness, and rage. But the man who brings his reason to support his passion, and beholds what he loves as liable to all the calamities of human life both in body and mind, and even at the best, what must bring upon him new cares and new relations; such a lover, I say, will form himself accordingly, and adapt his mind to the nature of his circumstances. This latter person will be prepared to be a father, a friend, an advocate, a steward for people yet unborn, and has proper affections ready for every incident in the marriage state. Such a man can hear the cries of children with pity instead of anger; and when they run over his head, he is not disturbed at their noise, but is glad of their mirth and health. Tom Trusty has told me, that he thinks it doubles his attention to the most intricate affair he is about, to hear his children, for whom all his cares are applied, make a noise in the next room: on the other side, Will Sparkish cannot put on his periwig, or adjust his cravat at the glass, for the noise of these damned nurses and squalling brats; and then ends with a gallant reflexion upon the comforts of matrimony, runs out of their hearing, and drives to the chocolate-house.

ACCORDING as the husband is disposed in himself, every circumstance of his life is to give him torment or pleasure. When the affection is well placed, and supported by the considerations of duty, honour and friendship, which are in the highest degree engaged in this alliance, there can nothing arise in the common course of life, or from the blows or favours of fortune, in which a man will not find matter of some delight unknown to a single condition.

He who sincerely loves his wife and family, and studies to improve that affection in himself, conceives pleasure from the most indifferent things; while the married man, who has not bid adieu to the fashions and false gallantries of the town, is perplexed with every thing around him. In both these cases men cannot, indeed, make a fillier figure, than in repeating such pleasures and pains to the rest of the world; but I speak of them only, as they sit upon those who are involved in them. As I visit all sorts of people, I cannot indeed but smile, when the good lady tells her husband what extraordinary things the child spoke since he went out. No longer than yesterday I was prevailed with to go home with a fond husband; and his wife told him, that his son, of his own head, when the clock in the parlour struck two, said, Papa would come home to dinner presently. While the father has him in a rapture in his arms, and is drowning him with kisses, the wife tells me he is but just four years old. Then they both struggle for him, and bring him up to me, and repeat his observation of two o'clock.

I was called upon, by looks upon the child, and then at me, to say something; and I told the father, that this remark of the infant of his coming home, and joining the time with it, was a certain indication that he would be a great historian and chronologer. They are neither of them fools, yet received my compliment with great acknowledgment of my prescience. I far-ed very well at dinner, and heard many other notable sayings of their heir, which would have given very little entertainment to one less turned to reflexion than I was: but it was a pleasing speculation to remark on the happiness of a life, in which things of no moment give occasion of hope, self-satisfaction and triumph. On the other hand, I have known an ill-natured coxcomb, who has hardly improved in any thing but bulk, for want of this disposition, silence the whole family, as a set of silly women and children, for recounting things which were really above his own capacity.

WHEN I say all this, I cannot deny but there are perverse jades that fall to men's lots, with whom it requires more than common proficiency in philosophy to be able to live. When these are joined to men of warm spirits, without temper or learning, they are frequently corrected with stripes: but one of our famous lawyers is of opinion, that this ought to be used sparingly: as I remember, those are his very words; but as it is proper to draw some spiritual use out of all afflictions, I should rather recommend to those who are thus visited with women of spirit, to form themselves for the world by patience at home. Socrates, who is by all accounts the undoubted head of the sect of the hen-peck'd, owned and acknowledged that he owed great part of his virtue to the exercise which his useful wife constantly gave it. There are several good instructions may be drawn from his wife answers to people of less fortitude than himself on this subject. A friend, with indignation, asked how so good a man could live with so violent a creature? He observed to him, That they who learn to keep a good seat on horse-back, mount the least manageable they can get, and when they have mastered them, they are sure never to be discomposed on the backs of steeds less restive. At several times, to different persons, on the same subject, he has said, My dear friend, you are beholden to Xantippe that I bear so well your flying out in a dispute. To another, My hen clacks very much, but she brings me chickens. They that live in a trading street are not disturbed at the passage of carts. I would have, if possible, a wise man be contented with his lot, even with a shrew; for though he cannot make her better, he may, you see, make himself better by her means.

BUT instead of pursuing my design of displaying conjugal love in its natural beauties and attractions, I am got into tales to the disadvantage of that state of life. I must say therefore, that I am verily persuaded, that whatever is delightful in human life, is to be enjoyed in greater perfection in the married, than in the single condition. He that has this passion in perfection, in occasions of joy can say to himself, besides his own satisfaction, How happy will this make my wife and children? Upon occurrences of distress or danger, can comfort himself, But all this while my wife and children are safe. There is something in it that doubles satisfaction, because others participate them; and dispels afflictions, because others are exempt from them. All who are married without this relish of their circumstance, are in either a tasteless indolence and negligence, which is hardly to be attained, or else live in the hourly repetition of sharp answers, eager upbraidings and distracting reproaches. In a word, the married state, with and without the affection suitable to it, is the compleatest image of heaven and hell we are capable of receiving in this life. T

No. 480. Wednesday, September 10.

Responsare cupidinibus, contemnere honores, Fortis, et in seipso totus teres, atque rotundus.

HOR.

*Who can ambition's vainest gifts despise,
Firm in himself who on himself relies,
Polish'd and round who runs his proper course,
And breaks misfortune with superior force.*

FRANCIS.

THE other day looking over those old manuscripts of which I have formerly given some account, and which relate to the character of the mighty Pharamond of France, and the close friendship between him and his friend Eucrate: I found among the letters which had been in the custody of the latter, an epistle from a country gentleman to Pharamond, wherein he excuses himself from coming to court. The gentleman it seems, was contented with his condition, had formerly been in the king's service; but at the writing the following letter, had from leisure and reflexion, quite another sense of things than that which he had in the more active part of his life.

Monsieur Chezluy to Pharamond.

Dread Sir,

I HAVE from your own hand (inclosed under the cover of Mr Eucrate of your Majesty's bed chamber) a letter which invites me to court. I understand this great honour to be done me out of respect and inclination to me, rather than regard to your own service: for which reason I beg leave to lay before your Majesty my reasons for declining to depart from home; and will not doubt but, as your motive

‘ in desiring my attendance was to make me an happier man, when you think that will not be effected by ‘ my remove, you will permit me to stay where I am.
‘ Those who have an ambition to appear in courts, have ‘ ever an opinion that their persons or their talents ‘ are particularly formed for the service or ornament of ‘ that place; or else are hurried by downright desire ‘ of gain, or what they call honour, or take upon themselves whatever the generosity of their master can ‘ give them opportunities to grasp at. But your goodness shall not be thus imposed upon by me: I will ‘ therefore confess to you, that frequent solitude, and ‘ long conversation with such who know no arts which ‘ polish life, have made me the plainest creature in your ‘ dominions. Those less capacities of moving with a ‘ good grace, bearing a ready affability to all around ‘ me, and acting with ease before many, have quite ‘ left me. I am come to that, with regard to my person, that I consider it only as a machine I am obliged to take care of, in order to enjoy my soul in its ‘ faculties with alacrity; well remembering, that this ‘ habitation of clay will in a few years be a meaner ‘ piece of earth than any utensil about my house. When ‘ this is, as it really is, the most frequent reflexion I ‘ have, you will easily imagine how well I should become a drawing-room: add to this, what shall a man ‘ without desires do about the generous Pharamond?
‘ Monsieur Eucrate has hinted to me, that you have ‘ thoughts of distinguishing me with titles. As for ‘ myself, in the temper of my present mind, appellations of honour would but embarrass discourse, and ‘ new behaviour towards me perplexes me in every habitude of life. I am also to acknowledge to you, ‘ that my children, of whom your Majesty condescended to inquire, are all of them mean, both in their ‘ persons and genius. The estate my eldest son is ‘ heir to, is more than he can enjoy with a good grace.
‘ My self-love will not carry me so far, as to impose ‘ upon mankind the advancement of persons (merely ‘ for their being related to me) into high distinctions, ‘ who ought for their own sakes, as well as that of the ‘ public, to affect obscurity. I wish, my generous prince, ‘ as it is in your power to give honours and offices, it ‘ were also to give talents suitable to them: were it so, ‘ the noble Pharamond would reward the zeal of my ‘ youth with abilities to do him service in my age.

‘ THOSE who accept of favour without merit, sup‘ port themselves in it at the expence of your Majesty.
‘ Give me leave to tell you, Sir, this is the reason that ‘ we in the country hear so often repeated the word ‘ prerogative. That part of your law which is reserved ‘ in yourself, for the readier service and good of the ‘ public, slight men are eternally buzzing in our ears ‘ to cover their own follies and miscarriages. It would ‘ be an addition to the high favour you have done me, ‘ if you would let Eucrate send me word how often,
‘ and in what cases you allow a constable to insist u‘ pon the prerogative. From the highest to the low‘ est officer in your dominions, something of their own ‘ carriage they would exempt from examination under ‘ the shelter of the word prerogative. I would fain, ‘ most noble Pharamond, see one of your officers assert ‘ your prerogative by good and gracious actions.
‘ When is it used to help the afflicted, to rescue the ‘ innocent, to comfort the stranger? Uncommon me‘ thods, apparently undertaken to attain worthy ends, ‘ would never make power invidious. You see, Sir, ‘ I talk to you with the freedom your noble nature ap‘ proves in all whom you admit to your conversation.

‘ BUT, to return to your Majesty’s letter, I humbly ‘ conceive, that all distinctions are useful to men, only ‘ as they are to act in public; and it would be a ro‘ mantic madness for a man to be a lord in his closet.
‘ Nothing can be honourable to a man apart from the ‘ world, but the reflexion upon worthy actions; and ‘ he that places honour in a consciousness of well-doing, will have but little relish for any outward homage that is paid him, since what gives him distinction to himself, cannot come within the observation of his beholders. Thus all the words of Lordship, Honour and Grace, are only repetitions to a man, that the king has ordered him to be called so; but no evidences that there is any thing in himself that would give the man who applies to him those ideas, without the creation of his master.

I HAVE, most noble Pharamond, all honours and all titles in your own approbation: I triumph in them as they are your gift, I refuse them as they are to give me the observation of others. Indulge me, my noble master, in this chastity of renown; let me know myself in the favour of Pharamond; and look down upon the applause of the people. I am,

In all duty and loyalty,

Your Majesty's most obedient subject and servant,

JEAN CHEZLUY.

S I R,

I NEED not tell with what disadvantages men of low fortunes and great modesty come into the world; what wrong measures the diffidence of themselves, and fear of offending, often obliges them to take; and what a pity it is that their greatest virtues and qualities, that should soonest recommend them, are the main obstacle in the way of their preferment.

THIS, Sir, is my case; I was bred at a country-school, where I learned Latin and Greek. The misfortunes of my family forced me up to town, where a profession of the politer sort has protected me against infamy and want. I am now clerk to a lawyer, and in times of vacancy and recess from business have made myself master of Italian and French; and though the progress I have made in my business has

• gained me reputation enough for one of my standing,
 • yet my mind suggests to me every day, that it is not
 • upon that foundation I am to build my fortune.

• THE person I have my present dependence upon,
 • has it in his nature, as well as in his power to ad• vance me, by recommending me to a gentleman that
 • is going beyond sea in a public employment. I know
 • the printing this letter would point me out to those
 • I want confidence to speak to, and I hope it is not in • your power to refuse making any body happy.

September 9. 1712.

Yours, &c.

T

M. D.

No 481. Thursday, September 11.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

—————Uti non

Compositus melius cum Bitho Bacchius : in jus Acres procurrunt—————

HOR.

No better match'd with Bithus Bacchius strove :
To law they run, and wrangling dearly love.

IT is something pleasant enough to consider the different notions which different persons have of the same thing. If men of low condition very often set a value on things, which are not prized by those who are in an higher station of life, there are many things these esteem which are of no value among persons of an inferior rank. Common people are, in particular, very much astonished when they hear of those solemn contests and debates which are made among the great upon the punctilios of a public ceremony; and wonder to hear that any business of consequence should be retarded by those little circumstances, which they represent to themselves as trifling and insignificant. I am mightily pleased with a porter's decision in one of Mr Southern's plays, which is founded upon that fine distress of a virtuous woman's marrying a second husband, while her first was yet living. The first husband, who was supposed to have been dead, returning to his house after a long absence, raises a noble perplexity for the tragic part of the play. In the meanwhile the nurse and the porter conferring upon the difficulties that would ensue in such a case, honest Sampson thinks the matter may be easily decided, and solves it very judiciously, by the old proverb, that if his first master be still living, The man must have his mare again. There is nothing in my time which has so much surprized and confounded the greatest part of my honest countrymen, as the present controversy between Count Rechteren and Monsieur Mesnager, which employs the wise heads of so many nations, and holds all the affairs of Europe in suspense.

UPON my going into a coffee-house yesterday, and lending an ear to the next table, which was encompassed with a circle of inferior politicians, one of them, after having read over the news very attentively, broke out into the following remarks. I am afraid, says he, this unhappy rupture between the footmen at Utrecht will retard the peace of Christendom. I wish the Pope may not be at the bottom of it. His Holiness has a very good hand at fomenting a division, as the poor Swiss Cantons have lately experienced to their cost. If Monsieur What-d'ye-call-him's domestics will not come to an accommodation, I do not know how the quarrel can be ended but by a religious war.

WHY truly, says a Wiseacre that sat by him, were I as the king of France, I would scorn to take part with the footmen of either side; here's all the business of Europe stands still, because Monsieur Mesnager's man has had his head broke. If Count Rectrum had given them a pot of ale after it, all would have been well, without any of this bustle; but they say he is a warm man, and does not care to be made mouths at.

UPON this, one, that had held his tongue hitherto, began to exert himself; declaring, that he was very well pleased the plenipotentiaries of our Christian princes took this matter into their serious consideration; for that lacqueys were never so saucy and pragmatical as they are now-a-days, and that he should be glad to see them taken down in the treaty of peace, if it might be done without prejudice to the public affairs.

ONE who sat at the other end of the table, and seemed to be in the interests of the French king, told them, that they did not take the matter right, for that his most Christian majesty did not resent this matter because it was an injury done to Monsieur Mesnager's footmen; for, says he, what are Monsieur Mesnager's footmen to him? but because it was done to his subjects. Now, says he, let me tell you, it would look very odd for a subject of France to have a bloody nose, and his sovereign not to take notice of it. He is obliged in honour to defend his people against hostilities; and if the Dutch will be so insolent to a crowned head, as, in any wise to cuff or kick those who are under his protection, I think he is in the right to call them to an account for it.

THIS distinction set the controversy upon a new foot, and seemed to be very well approved by most that heard it, till a little warm fellow, who declared himself a friend to the house of Austria, fell most unmercifully upon his Gallic majesty, as encouraging his subjects to make mouths at their betters, and afterwards skreening them from the punishment that was due to their insolence. To which he added, that the French nation was so addicted to grimace, that if there was not a stop put to it at the general congress, there would be no walking the streets for them in a time of peace, especially if they continued masters of the West Indies. The little man proceeded with a great deal of warmth, declaring, that if the allies were of his mind, he would oblige the French king to burn his gallies, and tolerate the Protestant religion in his dominions before he would sheath his sword. He concluded with calling Monsieur Mesnager an insignificant prig.

THE dispute was now growing very warm, and one does not know where it would have ended, had not a young man about one and twenty, who seems to have been brought up with an eye to the law, taken the debate into his hand, and given it as his opinion, that neither Count Rechteren nor Monsieur Mesnager had behaved themselves right in this affair. Count Rechteren, says he, should have made affidavit that his servant had been affronted, and then Monsieur Mesnager would have done him justice by taking away their liveries from them, or some other way that he might have thought the most proper; for let me tell you, if a man makes a mouth at me, I am not to knock the teeth out of it for his pains. Then again, as for Monsieur Mesnager, upon his servants being beaten, why, he might have had his action of assault and battery. But as the case now stands, if you will have my opinion, I think they ought to bring it to referees.

I HEARD a great deal more of this conference, but I must confess with little edification; for all I could learn at last from these honest gentlemen, was, that the matter in debate was of too high a nature for such heads as theirs, or mine, to comprehend. O

No. 482. Friday, September 12.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Floriferis ut apes in saltibus omnia libant.

LUCR. l. 3. v. 11.

As from the sweetest flow'rs the lab'ring bee Extracts her precious sweets.

CREECH.

WHEN I have published any single paper that falls in with the popular taste, and pleases more than ordinary, it always brings me in a great return of letters. My Tuesday's discourse, wherein I gave several admonitions to the fraternity of the Hen-peck'd, has already produced me very many correspondents; the reason I cannot guess at, unless it be that such a discourse is of general use, and every married man's money. An honest tradesman, who dates his letter from Cheap-side, sends me thanks in the name of a club, who, he tells me, meet as often as their wives will give them leave, and stay together till they are sent for home. He informs me, that my paper has administered great consolation to their whole club, and desires me to give some farther account of Socrates, and to acquaint them in whose reign he lived, whether he was a citizen or a courtier, whether he buried Xantippe, with many other particulars: for that by his sayings he appears to have been a very wise man, and a good Christian. Another, who writes himself Benjamin Bamboo, tells me, that being coupled with a shrew, he had endeavoured to tame her by such lawful means as those which I mentioned in my last Tuesday's paper, and that in his wrath he had often gone further than Bracton allows in those cases; but that for the future he was resolved to bear it like a man of temper and learning, and consider her only as one who lives in his house to teach him philosophy. Tom Dapperwit says, that he agrees with me in that whole discourse, excepting only the last sentence, where I affirm the married state to be either an heaven or an hell. Tom has been at the charge of a penny upon this occasion, to tell me, that by his experience it is neither one nor the other, but rather that middle kind of state, commonly known by the name of Purgatory.

THE fair sex have likewise obliged me with their reflexions upon the same discourse. A lady who calls herself Euterpe, and seems a woman of letters, asks me, whether I am for establishing the Salick law in every family, and why it is not fit that a woman who has discretion and learning should sit at the helm, when the husband is weak and illiterate? Another, of a quite different character, subscribes herself Xantippe, and tells me, that she follows the example of her name-sake; for being married to a bookish man, who has no knowledge of the world, she is forced to take their affairs into their own hands, and to spirit him up now and then, that he may not grow musty, and unfit for conversation.

AFTER this abridgment of some letters which are come to my hands upon this occasion, I shall publish one of them at large.

Mr SPECTATOR,

YOU have given us a lively picture of that kind of husband who comes under the denomination of the Hen-peck'd; but I do not remember that you have ever touched upon one that is of the quite different character, and who, in several places of England, goes by the name of a Cot quean. I have the misfortune to be joined for life with one of this character, who in reality is more a woman than I am. He was bred up under the tuition of a tender mother, till she had made him as good a housewife as herself. He could preserve apricots, and make gellies, before he had been two years out of the nursery. He was never suffered to go abroad for fear of catching cold; when he should have been hunting down a buck, he was by his mother's side learning how to season it, or put it in crust; and was making paper-boats with his sisters at an age, when other young gentlemen are crossing the seas, or travelling into foreign countries. He has the whitest hand that you ever saw in your life, and raises paste better than any woman in England. These qualifications make him a sad husband: he is perpetually in the kitchen, and has a thousand squabbles with the cook-maid. He is better acquainted with the milk-score, than his steward's accounts. I fret to death when I hear him find fault with a dish that is not dressed to his liking, and instructing his friends that dine with him in the best pickle for a walnut, or sauce for an haunch of venison: With all this, he is a very good natured husband, and never fell out with me in his life, but once, upon the over-roasting of a dish of wild-fowl: at the same time I must own, I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly sometimes, than of such an effeminate busy nature in a province that does not belong to him. Since you have given us the character of a wife who wears the breeches, pray say something of a husband that wears the petticoat. Why should not a female character be as ridiculous in a man as a male character in one of our sex.

I am, &c.

No. 483. Saturday, September 13.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Nec Deus intersit nisi dignus vindice nodus

Inciderit——

HOR. Ars poet. v. 191.

Nor let a God in person stand display'd,

Unless the labouring plot deserve his aid. FRANCIS.

WE cannot be guilty of a greater act of uncharitableness, than to interpret the afflictions which befall our neighbours, as punishments and judgments. It aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance, and abates the compassion of those towards him, who regard him in so dreadful a light. The humour of turning every misfortune into a judgment, proceeds from wrong notions of religion, which, in its own nature, produces good-will towards men, and puts the mildest construction upon every accident that befalls them. In this case, therefore, it is not religion that sours a man's temper, but it is his temper that sours his religion: people of gloomy uncheerful imaginations, or of envious malignant tempers, whatever kind of life they are engaged in, will discover their natural tincture of mind in all their thoughts, words and actions. As the finest wines have often the taste of the soil, so even the most religious thoughts often draw something that is particular from the constitution of the mind in which they arise. When folly or superstition strike in with this natural depravity of temper, it is not in the power, even of religion itself, to preserve the character of the person who is possessed with it, from appearing highly absurd and ridiculous.

AN old maiden gentlewoman, whom I shall conceal under the name of Nemesis, is the greatest discoverer of judgments that I have met with. She can tell you what sin it was that set such a man's house on fire, or blew down his barns. Talk to her of an unfortunate young lady that hath lost her beauty by the small-pox, she fetches a deep sigh, and tells you, that when she had a fine face she was always looking on it in her glass. Tell her of a piece of good fortune that has befallen one of her acquaintance; and she wishes it may prosper with her, but her mother used one of her nieces very barbarously. Her usual remarks turn upon people who had great estates, but never enjoyed them, by reason of some flaw in their own, or their father's behaviour. She can give you the reason why such a one died childless; why such an one was cut off in the flower of his youth; why such an one was unhappy in her marriage; why one broke his leg in such a particular spot of ground; and why another was killed with a back-sword, rather than with any other kind of weapon. She has a crime for every misfortune that can befall any of her acquaintance; and when she hears of a robbery that has been made, or a murder that has been committed, enlarges more on the guilt of the suffering person, than on that of the thief or assassin. In short, she is so good a Christian, that whatever happens to herself, is a trial, and whatever happens to her neighbours is a judgment.

THE very description of this folly, in ordinary life, is sufficient to expose it; but when it appears in a pomp and dignity of stile, it is very apt to amuse and terrify the mind of the reader. Herodotus and Plutarch very often apply their judgments as impertinently as the old woman I have before mentioned, though their manner of relating them makes the folly itself appear venerable. Indeed, most historians, as well Christian as Pagan, have fallen into this idle superstition, and spoken of ill success, unforeseen disasters, and terrible events, as if they had been let into the secrets of Providence, and made acquainted with that private conduct by which the world is governed. One would think several of our own historians in particular had many revelations of these kind made to them. Our old English monks seldom let any of their kings depart in peace, who had endeavoured to diminish the power or wealth of which the ecclesiastics were in those times possessed. William the Conqueror's race generally found their judgments in the New Forest, where their fathers had pulled down churches and monasteries. In short, read one of the chronicles written by an author of this frame of mind, and you would think you were reading an history of the kings of Israel and Judah, where the historians were actually inspired, and where, by a particular scheme of Providence, the kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry or the worship of the true God.

I CANNOT but look upon this manner of judging upon misfortunes, not only to be very uncharitable in regard to the persons whom they befall, but very pre sumptuous in regard to him who is supposed to inflict them. It is a strong argument for a state of retribution hereafter, that in this world virtuous persons are very often unfortunate, and vicious persons prosperous; which is wholly repugnant to the nature of a being who appears infinitely wise and good in all his works, unless we may suppose that such a promiscuous and undistinguished distribution of good and evil, which was necessary for carrying on the designs of Providence in this life, will be rectified and made amends for in another. We are not therefore to expect that fire should fall from heaven in the ordinary course of Providence; nor when we see triumphant guilt or depressed virtue in particular persons, that Omnipotence will make bare its holy arm in defence of the one, or punishment of the other. It is sufficient that there is a day set apart for the hearing and requiting of both according to their respective merits.

THE folly of ascribing temporal judgments to any particular crimes, may appear from several considerations. I shall only mention two: first, That, generally speaking there is no calamity or affliction, which is supposed to have happened as a judgment to a vicious man, which does not happen to men of approved religion and virtue. When Diagoras the atheist was aboard one of the Athenian ships there arose a very violent tempest; upon which the mariners told him, that it was a just judgment upon them for having taken so impious a man on board. Diagoras begged them to look upon the rest of the ships that were in the same distress, and asked them whether or no Diagoras was on board every vessel in the fleet. We are all involved in the same calamities, and subject to the same accidents; and when we see any one of the species under any particular oppression, we should look upon it as arising from the common lot of human nature, rather than from the guilt of the person who suffers.

ANOTHER consideration, that may check our presumption in putting such a construction upon a misfortune, is this, that it is impossible for us to know what are calamities and what are blessings. How many accidents have passed for misfortunes, which have turned to the welfare and prosperity of the persons in whose lot they have fallen? How many disappointments have, in their consequences, saved a man from ruin? If we could look into the effects of every thing, we might be allowed to pronounce boldly upon blessings and judgments; but for a man to give his opinion of what he sees but in part, and in its beginnings, is an unjustifiable piece of rashness and folly. The story of Biton and Chitobus, which was in great reputation among the Heathens (for we see it quoted by all the ancient authors, both Greek and Latin, who have written upon the immortality of the soul) may teach us a caution in this matter. Those two brothers, being the sons of a lady who was priestess to Juno, drew their mother's chariot to the temple at the time of a great solemnity, the persons being absent who by their office were to have drawn her chariot on that occasion. The mother was so transported with this instance of filial duty, that she petitioned her goddess to bestow upon them the greatest gift that could be given to men; upon which they were both cast into a deep sleep, and the next morning found dead in the temple. This was such an event as would have been construed into a judgment, had it happened to the two brothers after an act of disobedience, and would doubtless have been represented as such by any ancient historian who had given us an account of it. O

No. 484. Monday, September 15.

Neque cuiquam tam statim clarum ingenium est, ut possit emergere; nisi illi materia, occasio, fautor etiam, commendatorque contingat. Plin. Epist.

No man's abilities are so remarkably shining, as not to stand in need of a proper opportunity, patron, and even the praises of a friend, to recommend them to the notice of the world.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ OF all the young fellows who are in their progress ‘ thro’ any profession, none seem to have so good ‘ a title to the protection of the men of eminence in it, ‘ as the modest man; not so much because his modest-‘ ty is a certain indication of his merit, as because ‘ ’tis a certain obstacle to the producing of it. Now
 ‘ as of all professions this virtue is thought to be more ‘ particularly unnecessary in that of the law than in ‘ any other, I shall only apply myself to the relief of ‘ such who follow this profession with this disadvan‘ tage. What aggravates the matter is, that those ‘ persons, who, the better to prepare themselves for ‘ this study, have made some progress in others, have,
 ‘ by addicting themselves to letters, increased their na‘ tural modesty, and consequently heightened the ob‘ struction to this sort of preferment; so that every ‘ one of these may emphatically be said to be such a ‘ one as laboureth and taketh pains, and is still the more ‘ behind. It may be a matter worth discussing then, ‘ why that which made a youth so amiable to the ‘ ancients, should make him appear so ridiculous to the ‘ moderns? And, why in our days there should be ‘ neglect and even oppression of young beginners, in‘ stead of that protection which was the pride of theirs?

' In the profession spoken of, 'tis obvious to every one ' whose attendance is required at Westminster-hall,
 ' with what difficulty a youth of any modesty has been ' permitted to make an observation, that could in no-
 ' ways detract from the merit of his elders, and is ab' solutely necessary for the advancing his own. I have ' often seen one of these not only molested in his ut' terance of something very pertinent, but even plun' dered of his question, and by a strong serjeant shoul' dered out of his rank, which he has recovered with ' much difficulty and confusion. Now as great part ' of the business of this profession might be dispatched
 ' by one that perhaps

——— Abest virtute disertis

Messala, nec scit quantum Causellius Aulus;

HOR. Ars poet. v. 370.

Who tries Messala's eloquence in vain,

Nor can a knotty point of law explain

Like learn'd Causellius, —————

' So I can't conceive the injustice done to the public, if
 ' the men of reputation in this calling would introduce
 ' such of the young ones into business, whose applicati' on to this study will let them into the secrets of it,
 ' as much as their modesty will hinder them from the ' practice: I say, it would be laying an everlasting ' obligation upon a young man, to be introduced at ' first only as a mute, till by this countenance, and a ' resolution to support the good opinion conceived of
 ' him in his betters, his complexion shall be so well
 ' settled, that the litigious of this island may be secure
 ' of his obstreperous aid. If I might be indulged to ' speak in the stile of a lawyer, I would say, That a' ny one about thirty years of age, might make a ' common motion to the court with as much elegance
 ' and propriety as the most aged advocates in the hall.

' I CAN'T advance the merit of modesty by any ar' gument of my own so powerfully, as by inquiring

 ' into the sentiments the greatest among the ancients
 ' of different ages entertained upon this virtue. If we ' go back to the days of Solomon, we shall find favour
 ' a necessary consequence to a shame fac'd man. Pliny,
 ' the greatest lawyer and most elegant writer of the ' age he lived in, in several of his epistles is very sol-
 ' licitous in recommending to the public some young ' men of his own profession, and very often undertakes
 ' to become an advocate, upon condition that some one ' of these his favourites, might be joined with him, in ' order to produce the merit of such, whose modesty
 ' otherwise would have suppressed it. It may seem ' very marvellous to a saucy modern, that Multum san-
 ' guinis, multum verecundiae, multum sollicitudinis in
 ' ore; to have the face first full of blood, then the coun-
 ' tenance dashed with modesty, and then the whole aspect
 ' as of one dying with fear, when a man begins to speak;
 ' should be esteemed by Pliny the necessary qualificati' ons of a fine speaker. Shakespear also has expressed ' himself in the same favourable strain of modesty,
 ' when he says,

— In the modesty of fearful duty
I read as much as from the rattling tongue
Of saucy and audacious eloquence.

' Now, since these authors have professed themselves
 ' for the modest man, even in the utmost confusions of ' speech and countenance, why should an intrepid ut' terance and a resolute vociferation thunder so suc' cessfully in our courts of justice? and why should
 ' that confidence of speech and behaviour, which seems ' to acknowledge no superior, and to defy all contra' diction, prevail over that deference and resignation
 ' with which the modest man implores that favoura' ble opinion which the other seems to command?

' As the case at present stands, the best consolation
 ' that I can administer to those who cannot get into ‘ that stroke of business (as the phrase is) which they ‘ deserve, is to reckon every particular acquisition of ‘ knowledge in this study as a real increase of their ‘ fortune; and fully to believe, that one day this ima‘ ginary gain will certainly be made out by one more ‘ substantial. I wish you would talk to us a little on ‘ this head, you would oblige,

Sir, Your humble servant.

THE author of this letter is certainly a man of good sense; but I am perhaps particular in my opinion on this occasion; for I have observed, that under the notion of modesty, men have indulged themselves in a spiritless sheepishness, and been for ever lost to themselves, their families, their friends, and their country. When a man has taken care to pretend to nothing but what he may justly aim at, and can execute as well as any other, without injustice to any other; it is ever want of breeding or courage to be brow-beaten or elbowed out of his honest ambition. I have said often, modesty must be an act of the will, and yet it always implies self-denial; for if a man has an ardent desire to do what is laudable for him to perform, and, from an unmanly bashfulness, shrinks away, and lets his merit languish in silence, he ought not to be angry at the world that a more unskilful actor succeeds in his part, because he has not confidence to come upon the stage himself. The generosity my correspondent mentions of Pliny, cannot be enough applauded. To cherish the dawn of merit, and hasten its maturity, was a work worthy a noble Roman and a liberal scholar. That concern which is described in the letter is to all the world the greatest charm imaginable; but then the modest man must proceed, and shew a latent resolution in himself; for the admiration of his modesty arises from the manifestation of his merit. I must confess we live in an age wherein a few empty blusterers carry away the praise of speaking, while a crowd of fellows over-stocked with knowledge are run down by them: I say over-stocked, because they certainly are so as to their service of mankind, if from their very store they raise to themselves ideas of respect, and greatness of the occasion, and I know not what, to disable themselves from explaining their thoughts. I must confess, when I have seen Charles Frankair rise up with a commanding mien, and torrent of handsome words, talk a mile off the purpose, and drive down twenty bashful boobies of ten times his sense, who at the same time were envying his impudence and despising his understanding, it has been matter of great mirth to me; but it soon ended in a secret lamentation, that the fountains of every thing praise-worthy in these realms, the universities, should be so muddied with a false sense of this virtue, as to produce men capable of being so abused. I will be bold to say, that it is a ridiculous education which does not qualify a man to make his best appearance before the greatest man and the finest woman to whom he can address himself. Were this judiciously corrected in the nurseries of learning, pert coxcombs would know their distance; but we must bear with this false modesty in our young nobility and gentry, till they cease at Oxford and Cambridge to grow dumb in the study of eloquence. T

No. 485. Tuesday, September 16.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Nihil tam firmum est, cui periculum non sit, etiam ab invalido.

Quint. Curt. l. 7. c. 8.

The strongest things are in danger even from the weakest.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘MY Lord Clarendon has observed, That few men ‘have done more harm than those who have been thought to be able to do least; and there cannot be a greater error, than to believe a man whom we see qualified with too mean parts to do good, to be therefore incapable of doing hurt. There is a supply of malice, of pride, of industry, and even of folly, in the weakest, when he sets his heart upon it, that makes a strange progress in mischief. What may seem to the reader the greatest paradox in the reflexion of the historian, is, I suppose, that folly, which is generally thought incapable of contriving or executing any design, should be so formidable to those whom it exerts itself to molest. But this will appear very plain, if we remember that Solomon says, It is sport to a fool to do mischief; and that he might the more emphatically express the calamitous circumstances of him who falls under the displeasure of this wanton person, the same author adds further, That a stone is heavy, and the sand weighty, but a fool's wrath is heavier than them both. It is impossible to suppress my own illustration upon this matter, which is, That as the man of sagacity bestirs himself to distress his enemy by methods probable and reducible to reason, so the same reason will fortify his enemy to elude these his regular efforts; but your fool projects, acts, and concludes, with such notable inconsistency, that no regular course of thought can evade or counterplot his prodigious machinations. My frontispiece, I believe, may be extended to imply, that several of our misfortunes arise from things, as well as persons, that seem of very little consequence. Into what tragical extravagancies does Shakespear hurry Othello upon the loss of an handkerchief only? and what barbarities does Desdemona suffer from a slight inadvertency in regard to this fatal trifle? If the schemes of all the enterprising spirits were to be carefully examined, some intervening accident, not considerable enough to occasion any debate upon, or give them any appre-

• hension of ill consequence from it, will be found to • be the occasion of their ill success, rather than any • error in points of moment and difficulty, which na• turally engaged their maturest deliberations. If • you go to the levee of any great man, you will ob• serve him exceeding gracious to several very insigni• ficant fellows: and this upon this maxim, That the • neglect of any person must arise from the mean opi• nion you have of his capacity to do you any service
• or prejudice; and that this calling his sufficiency in • question, must give him inclination, and where this • is, there never wants strength or opportunity to an• noy you. There is nobody so weak of invention,
• that cannot aggravate, or make some little stories to • vilify his enemy; and there are very few but have • good inclinations to hear them, and 'tis infinite • pleasure to the majority of mankind to level a per• son superior to his neighbours. Besides, in all mat• ter of controverfy, that party which has the great• est abilities labours under this prejudice, that he • will certainly be supposed upon account of his abi• lities, to have done an injury when perhaps he has • received one. It would be tedious to enumerate
• the strokes that nations and particular friends have • suffered from persons very contemptible.

• I THINK Henry IV. of France, so formidable to • his neighbours, could no more be secured against
• the resolute villainy of Ravillac, than Villiers duke
• of Buckingham, could be against that of Felton.
• And there is no incensed person so destitute, but can • provide himself with a knife or a pistol, if he finds
• stomach to apply them. That things and persons
• of no moment should give such powerful revolutions
• to the progress of those of the greatest, seems a pro• vidential disposition to baffle and abate the pride of • human sufficiency; as also to engage the humanity
• and benevolence of superiors to all below them, by ‘ letting them into this secret, that the stronger depends upon the weaker.

I am, S I R,

Your very humble servant.

Dear Sir,

Temple, paper-buildings.

‘ I RECEIVED a letter from you some time ago,
‘ which I should have answered sooner, had you ‘ informed me in yours to what part of this island I ‘ might have directed my impertinence; but having ‘ been let into the knowledge of that matter, this ‘ handsome excuse is no longer serviceable. My neighbour Prettyman shall be the subject of this letter;
‘ who falling in with the SPECTATOR’s doctrine concerning the month of May, began from that season ‘ to dedicate himself to the service of the fair in the following manner. I observed at the beginning of ‘ the month he bought him a new night-gown, either ‘ side to be worn outwards, both equally gorgeous ‘ and attractive; but till the end of the month I did ‘ not enter so fully into the knowledge of his contrivance, as the use of that garment has since suggested ‘ to me. Now you must know that all new cloaths ‘ raise and warm the wearer’s imagination into a conceit of his being a much finer gentleman than he ‘ was before, banishing all sobriety and reflexion, and ‘ giving him up to gallantry and amour. Inflamed ‘ therefore with this way of thinking, and full of the ‘ spirit of the month of May, did this merciless youth ‘ resolve upon the business of captivating. At first he ‘ confined himself to his room only, now and then appearing at his window in his night-gown, and practising that easy posture which expresses the very top ‘ and dignity of languishment. It was pleasing to see ‘ him diversify his loveliness, sometimes obliging the ‘ passengers only with a side face, with a book in his ‘ hand; sometimes being so generous as to expose the whole in the fulness of its beauty; at other times, by a judicious throwing back of his periwig, he would throw in his ears. You know he is that sort of person, which the mob call a handsome jolly man; which appearance cannot miss of captives in this part of the town. Being emboldened by daily success, he leaves his room with a resolution to extend his conquests; and I have apprehended him in his night-gown smiting in all parts of this neighbourhood.

THIS I, being of an amorous complexion, saw with indignation, and had thoughts of purchasing a wig in these parts; into which, being at a greater distance from the earth, I might have thrown a very liberal mixture of white horse-hair, which would make a fairer, and consequently a handsomer appearance, while my situation would secure me against any discoveries. But the passion to the handsome gentleman seems to be so fixed to that part of the building, that it will be extremely difficult to divert it to mine; so that I am resolved to stand boldly to the complexion of my own eye-brow, and prepare me an immense black wig of the same sort of structure with that of my rival. Now, though by this I shall not, perhaps, lessen the number of the admirers of his complexion, I shall have a fair chance to divide the passengers by the irresistible force of mine.

I EXPECT sudden dispatches from you, with advice of the family you are in now, how to deport myself upon this so delicate a conjuncture; with some comfortable resolutions in favour of the handsome black man against the handsome fair one.

C

I am, S I R,Your most humble servant.

N. B. He who writ this, is a black man, two pair of stairs; the gentleman of whom he writes, is fair, and one pair of stairs.

Mr SPECTATOR,

I ONLY say, that it is impossible for me to say how much I am Yours,

ROBIN SHORTER.

P.S. 'I SHALL think it a little hard, if you do not take
'as much notice of this epistle, as you have of the in'genious Mr Short's. I am not afraid to let the world
'see which is the deeper man of the two.'

ADVERTISEMENT.

London, September 15.

WHEREAS a young woman on horseback, in an equestrian habit, on the 13th instant in the evening, met the SPECTATOR within a mile and an half of this town, and flying in the face of justice, pulled off her hat, in which there was a feather, with the mien and air of a young officer, saying at the same time, Your servant Mr SPEC, or words to that purpose: This is to give notice, that if any person can discover the name, and place of abode of the said offender, so as she can be brought to justice, the informant shall have all fitting encouragement. T

XX

No. 486. Wednesday, September 17.

Audire est operæ pretium, procedere recte

Qui mæchis non vultis—— HOR. Sat. 2. l. 1. v. 38.

All ye, who wish some dire mishap may wait

This horning tribe, attend while I relate

What dangers and disasters they sustain,

How few their pleasures, and how mix'd with pain.

FRANCIS.

Mr SPECTATOR,

THERE are very many of my acquaintance followers of Socrates, with more particular regard to that part of his philosophy which we, among ourselves, call his domestics; under which denomination, or title, we include all the conjugal joys or sufferings. We have, indeed, with very great pleasure, observed the honour you do the whole fraternity of the hen-peck'd, in placing that illustrious man at our head, and it does in a very great measure baffle the gallery of pert rogues, who have no advantage above us, but in that they are single. But when you look about into the crowd of mankind, you will find the fair sex reigns with greater tyranny over lovers than husbands. You shall hardly meet one in a thousand who is wholly exempt from their dominion, and those that are so, are capable of no taste of life, and breathe and walk about the earth as insignificants. But I am going to desire your further favour in behalf of our harmless brotherhood, and hope you will shew in a true light the unmarried hen-peck'd, as well as you have done justice to us, who submit to the conduct of our wives. I am very particularly acquainted with one who is under entire submission to a kind girl, as he calls her; and though he knows I have been witness both to the ill usage he has received from her, and his inability to resist her tyranny, he still pretends to make a jest of me for a little more than ordinary obsequiousness to my spouse. No longer than Tuesday last he took me with him to visit his mistress; and he having, it seems, been a little in disgrace before, thought, by bringing me with him, she would constrain herself, and insensibly fall into general discourse with him; and so he might break the ice, and save himself all the ordinary compunctions and mortifications she used to make him suffer before she would be reconciled after any act of rebellion on his part. When we came into the room, we were received with the utmost coldness; and when he presented me as Mr such-a-one, his very good friend, she just had patience to suffer my salutation; but when he himself, with a very gay air, offered to follow me, she gave him a thundering box on the ear, called him a pitiful poor spirited wretch, how durst he see her face? His wig and hat fell in different parts of the floor. She seized the wig too soon for him to recover it, and kicking it down stairs, threw herself into an opposite room, pulling the door after her with a force, that you would have thought the hinges would have given way. We went down, you must think, with no very good countenances; and as we sneaked off, and were driving home together, he confessed to me, that her anger was thus highly raised, because he did not think fit to fight a gentleman, who said, She was what she was; but, says he, a kind letter or two, or fifty pieces, will put her in humour again. I asked why he did not part with her; he answered, he loved her with all the tenderneſs imaginable, and she had too many charms to be abandoned for a little quickneſs of ſpirit. Thus does this illegitimate hen pecked overlook the huſſy's having no regard to his very life and fame, in putting him upon an infamous diſpute about her reputation; yet has he the confidence to laugh at me, becauſe I obey my poor dear in keeping out of harm's way, and not ſtaying too late from my own family, to paſs through the hazards of a town full of ranters and debauchees. You that are a philoſopher ſhould urge in our behalf, that when we bear with a froward woman, our patience is preſerved, in conſideration that a breach with her might be a diſhonour to children who are deſcended from us, and whoſe concern make us tolerate a thouſand frailties, for fear they ſhould redound diſhonour upon the innocent. This and the like circumſtances, which carry with them the moſt valuable regards of human life, may be mentioned for our long ſufferings; but in the caſe of gallants, they ſwallow ill uſage from one to whom they have no obligation, but

‘ from a base passion which it is meant to indulge,
‘ and which it would be glorious to overcome.

‘ THESE sort of fellows are very numerous, and ‘ some have been conspicuously such, without shame; ‘ nay they have carried on the jest in the very article ‘ of death, and to the diminution of the wealth and ‘ happiness of their families, in bar of those honoura‘ bly near to them, have left immense wealth to their ‘ paramours. What is this but being a cully in the ‘ grave! sure this is being hen-pecked with a ven‘ geance! But without dwelling upon these less fre‘ quent instances of eminent cullyism, what is there so ‘ common as to hear a fellow curse his fate that he ‘ cannot get rid of a passion to a jilt, and quote an ‘ half line out of a miscellany poem to prove his ‘ weakness is natural? If they will go on thus, I have ‘ nothing to say to it; but then let them not pretend ‘ to be free all this while, and laugh at us poor mar‘ ried patients.

‘ I HAVE known one wench in this town carry an ‘ haughty dominion over her lovers so well, that she ‘ has at the same time been kept by a sea captain in ‘ the Straits, a merchant in the city, a country gen‘ tleman in Hampshire, and had all her correspon‘ ces managed by one she kept for her own uses. This ‘ happy man (as the phrase is) used to write very ‘ punctually, every post, letters for the mistress to tran-‘ scribe. He would sit in his night gown and slippers, ‘ and be as grave giving an account, only changing ‘ names, that there was nothing in those idle reports ‘ they had heard of such a scoundrel as one of the o‘ ther lovers was; and how could he think she could ‘ condescend so low, after such a fine gentleman as ‘ each of them? For the same epistle said the same ‘ thing to and of every one of them. And so Mr Se‘ cretary and his lady went to bed with great order.

‘ To be short, Mr SPECTATOR, we husbands shall ‘ never make the figure we ought in the imaginations of ' young men growing up in the world, except you can ' bring it about that a man of the town shall be as in' famous a character as a woman of the town. But

 ' of all that I have met with in my time, commend me
 ' to Betty Duall: She is the wife of a sailor, and the ' kept mistress of a man of quality; she dwells with
 ' the latter during the sea-faring of the former.
 ' The husband asks no questions; fees his apartments
 ' furnished with riches not his, when he comes into ' port; and the lover is as joyful as a man arrived at ' his haven when the other puts to sea. Betty is the ' most eminently victorious of any of her sex, and
 ' ought to stand recorded the only woman of the age
 ' in which she lives, who has possessed at the same time
 ' two abused, and two contented. ————— T

No. 487. Thursday, September 18.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

—————Cum prostrata sopore

Urget membra quies, et mens sine pondere ludit. Petr.

While sleep oppresses the tir'd limbs, the mind

Plays without weight, and wantons unconfin'd.

THOUGH there are many authors, who have written on dreams, they have generally considered them only as revelations of what has already happened in distant parts of the world, or as presages of what is to happen in future periods of time.

I SHALL consider this subject in another light, as dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of an human soul, and some intimation of its independency on matter.

IN the first place, our dreams are great instances of that activity which is natural to the human soul, and which it is not in the power of sleep to deaden or abate.

When the man appears tired and worn out with the labours of the day, this active part in his composition is still busied and unwearied. When the organs of sense want their due repose and necessary reparations, and the body is no longer able to keep pace with that spiritual substance to which it is united, the soul exerts herself in her several faculties, and continues in action till her partner is again qualified to bear her company. In this case dreams look like the relaxations and amusements of the soul, when she is disincumbered of her machine, her sports and recreations, when she has laid her charge asleep.

In the second place, dreams are an instance of that agility and perfection which is natural to the faculties of the mind, when they are disengaged from the body. The soul is clogged and retarded in her operations, when she acts in conjunction with a companion that is so heavy and unwieldy in its motions. But in dreams it is wonderful to observe with what a sprightliness and alacrity she exerts herself. The flow of speech make unpremeditated harangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with. The grave abound in pleasantries, the dull in repartees and points of wit. There is not a more painful action of the mind than invention; yet in dreams it works with that ease and activity, that we are not sensible when the faculty is employed. For instance, I believe every one, some time or other, dreams that he is reading papers, books, or letters: in which case the invention prompts so readily, that the mind is imposed upon, and mistakes its own suggestions for the compositions of another.

I SHALL, under this head, quote a passage out of the Religio Medici, in which the ingenious author gives an account of himself in his dreaming, and his waking thoughts. “ We are somewhat more than “ ourselves in our sleeps, and the slumber of the body “ seems to be but the waking of the soul. It is the “ ligation of sense, but the liberty of reason; and our “ waking conceptions do not match the fancies of our “ sleeps. At my nativity my ascendant was the watry “ sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour “ of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden “ planet in me. I am no way facetious, nor disposed “ for the mirth and galliardize of company; yet in “ one dream I can compose a whole comedy, behold

“ the action, apprehend the jests, and laugh myself “ awake at the conceits thereof. Were my memory “ as faithful as my reason is then fruitful, I would “ never study but in my dreams; and this time also “ would I chuse for my devotions; but our grosser “ memories have then so little hold of our abstracted “ understandings, that they forget the story, and can “ only relate to our awakened souls a confused and “ broken tale of that that has passed.—Thus it is “ observed, that men sometimes, upon the hour of “ their departure, do speak and reason above them“ selves: for then the soul beginning to be freed from “ the ligaments of the body, begins to reason like “ herself, and to discourse in a strain above mortality.”

WE may likewise observe in the third place, that the passions affect the mind with greater strength when we are asleep, than when we are awake. Joy and sorrow give us more vigorous sensations of pain or pleasure at this time, than at any other. Devotion likewise, as the excellent author above mentioned has hinted, is in a very particular manner heightened and enflamed, when it rises in the soul at a time that the body is thus laid at rest. Every man's experience will inform him in this matter, though it is very probable, that this may happen differently in different constitutions. I shall conclude this head with the two following problems, which I shall leave to the solution of my reader. Supposing a man always happy in his dreams, and miserable in his waking thoughts, and that his life was equally divided between them, whether would he be more happy or miserable? Were a man a king in his dreams, and a beggar awake, and dreamt as consequentially, and in as continued unbroken schemes as he thinks when awake, whether he would be in reality a king or a beggar, or rather whether he would not be both?

THERE is another circumstance, which, methinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams: I mean that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her. Were that active watchful being only conscious of her own existence at such a time, what a painful solitude would her hours of sleep be? Were the soul sensible of her being alone in her sleeping moments, after the same manner that she is sensible of it while awake, the time would hang very heavy on her, as it often actually does when she dreams that she is in such solitude.

————— Semperque relinqui

Sola sibi, semper longam incommitata videtur

Ire viam————

VIRG. Æn. 4. v. 466.

————— She seems alone

To wander in her sleep thro' ways unknown, Guideless and dark.

DRYDEN.

BUT this observation I only make by the way. What I would here remark, is that wonderful power in the soul, of producing her own company on these occasions. She converses with numberless beings of her own creation, and is transported into ten thousand scenes of her own raising. She is herself the theatre, the actors, and the beholder. This puts me in mind of a saying which I am infinitely pleased with; and which Plutarch ascribes to Heraclitus, “That all men, whilst they “are awake, are in one common world; but that “each of them, when he is asleep, is in a world of his “own.” The waking man is conversant in the world of nature; when he sleeps he retires to a private world that is particular to himself. There seems something in this consideration that intimates to us a natural grandeur and perfection in the soul, which is rather to be admired than explained.

I must not omit that argument for the excellency of the soul, which I have seen quoted out of Tertulian, namely, its power of divining in dreams. That several such divinations have been made, none can question, who believes the holy writings, or who has but the least degree of a common historical faith; there being innumerable instances of this nature in several authors, both ancient and modern, sacred and profane. Whether such dark presages, such visions of the night, proceed from any latent power in the soul, during this her state of abstraction, or from any communication with the Supreme Being, or from any operation of subordinate spirits, has been a great dispute among the learned; the matter of fact is, I think, incontestible, and has been looked upon as such by the greatest writers, who have been never suspected either of superstition or enthusiasm.

I do not suppose, that the soul in these instances is entirely loose and unfettered from the body: it is sufficient, if she is not so far sunk, and immersed in matter, nor entangled and perplexed in her operations, with such motions of blood and spirits, as when she actuates the machine in its waking hours. The corporeal union is slackened enough to give the mind more play. The soul seems gathered within herself, and recovers that spring which is broke and weakened, when she operates more in concert with the body.

The speculations I have here made, if they are not arguments, they are at least strong intimations, not only of the excellency of an human soul, but of its independence on the body: and if they do not prove, do at least confirm those two great points, which are established by many other reasons that are altogether unanswerable. ○

No. 488.

Friday, September 19.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

*Quanti emptæ? parvo. Quanti ergo? octo assibus.
Eheu!*

HOR. Sat. 3. l. 2. v. 156.

————— What will it cost? Nay, hold.

A very trifle. Sir, I will be told.——

Three pence.——Alas!

I FIND, by several letters which I receive daily, that many of my readers would be better pleased to pay three halfpence for my paper, than twopence. The ingenious T. W. tells me, that I have deprived him of the best part of his breakfast, for that since the rise of my paper, he is forced every morning to drink his dish of coffee by itself, without the addition of the Spectator, that used to be better than lace to it. Eugenius informs me very obligingly, that he never thought he should have disliked any passage in my paper, but that of late there have been two words in every one of them, which he could heartily wish left out, viz. Price twopence. I have a letter from a soap boiler, who condole with me very affectionately, upon the necessity we both lie under of setting an higher price on our commodities, since the late tax has been laid upon them, and desiring me when I write next on that subject, to speak a word or two upon the duties upon Castile soap. But there is none of these my correspondents, who writes with a greater turn of good sense and elegance of expression, than the generous Philomedes, who advises me to value every Spectator at sixpence, and promises that he himself will engage for above an hundred of his acquaintance, who shall take it in at that price.

LETTERS from the female world are likewise come to me, in great quantities, upon the same occasion; and as I naturally bear a great deference to this part of our species, I am very glad to find that those who approve my conduct in this particular, are much more numerous than those who condemn it. A large family of daughters have drawn me up a very handsome remonstrance, in which they set forth that their father having refused to take in the Spectator, since the additional price was set upon it, they offered him unanimously to bate him the article of bread and butter in the tea table account, provided the Spectator might be served up to them every morning as usual. Upon this the old gentleman, being pleased it seems with their desire of improving themselves, has granted them the continuance both of the SPECTATOR and their bread and butter, having given particular orders, that the tea table shall be set forth every morning with its customary bill of fare, and without any manner of defalcation. I thought myself obliged to mention this particular, as it does honour to this worthy gentleman; and if the young lady Lætitia, who sent me this account, will acquaint me with his name, I will insert it at length in one of my papers, if he desires it.

I SHOULD be very glad to find out any expedient that might alleviate the expence which this my paper brings to any of my readers; and, in order to it, must propose two points to their consideration. First, that if they retrench any the smallest particular in their ordinary expence, it will easily make up the halfpenny a-day, which we have now under consideration. Let a lady sacrifice but a single ribbon to her morning studies, and it will be sufficient: let a family burn but a candle a night less than their usual number, and they may take in the SPECTATOR without detriment to their private affairs.

IN the next place, if my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, let them have patience, and they may buy them in the lump, without the burden of a tax upon them. My speculations, when they are sold single like cherries upon the stick, are delights for the rich and wealthy; after some time they come to market in greater quantities, and are every ordinary man's money. The truth of it is, they have a certain flavour at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances of time, place and person, which they may lose if they are not taken early; but in this case every reader is to consider, whether it is not better for him to be half a year behind hand with the fashionable and polite part of the world, than to strain himself beyond his circumstances. My bookseller has now about ten thousand of the third and fourth volumes, which he has ready to publish, having already disposed of as large an edition both of the first and second volumes. As he is a person whose head is very well turned for his business, he thinks they would be a very proper present to be made to persons at christenings, marriages, visiting-days, and the like joyful solemnities, as several other books are frequently given at funerals. He has printed them in such a little portable volume, that many of them may be ranged together upon a single plate; and is of opinion, that a salver of Spectators would be as acceptable an entertainment to the ladies, as a salver of sweetmeats.

I SHALL conclude this paper with an epigram lately sent to the writer of the Spectator, after having returned my thanks to the ingenious author of it.

S I R,

HAVING heard the following epigram very much commended, I wonder that it has not yet had a place in any of your papers; I think the suffrage of our poet laureat should not be overlooked, which shews the opinion he entertains of your paper, whether the notion he proceeds upon be true or false. I make bold to convey it to you, not knowing if it has yet come to your hands.

On the SPECTATOR.

By Mr TATE.

——— Aliusque et idemNasceris ——— HOR. Carm. Sæc. v. 10.You rise another and the same.

WHEN first the Tatler to a mute was turn'd,
 Great Britain for her censor's silence mourn'd; Robb'd of his sprightly beams, he wept the night,
 'Till the Spectator rose, and blaz'd as bright.
 So the first man the sun's first setting view'd,
 And sigh'd, 'till circling day his joys renew'd;
 Yet doubtful how that second sun to name,
 Whether a bright successor, or the same.
 So we: but now from this suspense are freed,
 Since all agree, who both with judgment read,
 'Tis the same sun, and does himself succeed.

O

No. 489. Saturday, September 20.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

——— Βαθυρρεταο μεγα σθενος 'Ωκεανοιο.

Hom.

The mighty force of ocean's troubled flood.

S I R,

UPON reading your essay concerning the pleasures of the imagination, I find among the three sources of those pleasures which you have discovered, that greatness is one. This has suggested to me the reason why, of all objects that I have ever seen, there is none which affects my imagination so much as the sea or ocean. I cannot see the heavings of this prodigious bulk of waters, even in a calm, without a very pleasing astonishment: but when it is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect. A troubled ocean to a man who sails upon it, is, I think, the biggest object that he can see in motion, and consequently gives his imagination one of the highest kinds of pleasure that can arise from greatness. I must confess it is impossible for me to survey this world of fluid matter, without thinking on the hand that first poured it out, and made a proper channel for its reception. Such an object naturally raises in my thoughts the idea of an Almighty Being, and convinces me of his existence as much as a metaphysical demonstration. The imagination prompts the understanding, and, by the greatness of the sensible object, produces in it the idea of a Being who is neither circumscribed by time nor space.

As I have made several voyages upon the sea, I have often been tossed in storms, and on that occasion have frequently reflected on the descriptions of them in ancient poets. I remember Longinus highly recommends one in Homer, because the poet has not amused himself with little fancies upon the occasion, as authors of an inferior genius, whom he mentions, had done, but because he has gathered together those circumstances which are the most apt to terrify the imagination, and which really happen in the raging of a tempest. It is for the same reason, that I prefer the following description of a ship in a storm, which the Psalmist has made, before any other I have ever met with.

“ They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in the great waters: these see the works of the “ Lord, and his wonders in the deep. For he commandeth and raiseth the stormy wind, which lifteth “ up the waters thereof: they mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths, their soul

“ is melted because of trouble. They reel to and “ fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at “ their wits end. Then they cry unto the Lord in “ their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their di“ stresses. He maketh the storm a calm, so that the “ waves thereof are still. Then they are glad, be“ cause they be quiet, so he bringeth them unto their “ desired haven.

By the way, how much more comfortable as well as rational, is the system of the Psalmist, than the Pagan scheme in Virgil, and other poets, where one deity is represented as raising a storm, and another as laying it? Were we only to consider the sublime in this piece of poetry, what can be nobler than the idea it gives us of the Supreme Being thus raising a tumult among the elements, and recovering them out of their confusion, thus troubling and becalming nature?

GREAT painters do not only give us landships of gardens, groves, and meadows, but very often employ their pencils upon sea-pieces: I could wish you would follow their example. If this small sketch may deserve a place among your works, I shall accompany it with a divine ode: made by a gentleman upon the conclusion of his travels.

I.

HOW are thy servants blest, O Lord!
 How sure is their defence!
 Eternal Wisdom is their guide,
 Their help Omnipotence.

II.

In foreign realms and lands remote,
 Supported by thy care,
 Thro' burning climes I pass'd unhurt,
 And breath'd in tainted air.

III.

Thy mercy sweeten'd every soil,
 Made every region please:

The hoary Alpine hills it warm'd,
And smooth'd the Tyrrhene seas.

IV.

Think, O my soul, devoutly think,
How with affrighted eyes,
Thou saw'st the wide extended deep
In all its horrors rise!

V.

Confusion dwelt in ev'ry face,
And fear in ev'ry heart:
When waves on waves, and gulphs on gulphs, O'ercame the pilot's art.

VI.

Yet then from all my griefs, O Lord,
Thy mercy set me free;
Whilst in the confidence of pray'r
My soul took hold on thee.

VII.

For tho' in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save.

VIII.

The storm was laid, the winds retir'd,
Obedient to thy will;
The sea that roar'd at thy command,
At thy command was still.

IX.

In midst of dangers, fears and death,
Thy goodness I'll adore,
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humbly hope for more.

X.

My life, if thou preserv'st my life,
Thy sacrifice shall be;
And death, if death must be my doom,
Shall join my soul to thee!

No 490. Monday, September 22.

Domus et placens uxor. HOR. Od. 14. l. 2. v. 21.

Thy house and pleasing wife.

I HAVE very long entertained an ambition to make the word Wife the most agreeable and delightful name in nature. If it be not so in itself, all the wiser part of mankind from the beginning of the world to this day has consented in an error: But our unhappiness in England has been, that a few loose men of genius for pleasure, have turned it all to the gratification of ungoverned desires, in spite of good sense, form and order; when, in truth, any satisfaction beyond the boundaries of reason, is but a step towards madness and folly. But is the sense of joy and accomplishment of desire no way to be indulged or attained? and have we appetites given us not to be at all gratified? Yes certainly: marriage is an institution calculated for a constant scene of as much delight as our being is capable of. Two persons who have chosen each other out of all the species, with design to be each other's mutual comfort and entertainment, have in that action bound themselves to be good-humoured, affable, discreet, forgiving, patient and joyful, with respect to each other's frailties and perfections, to the end of their lives. The wiser of the two (and it always happens one of them is such) will, for her or his own sake, keep things from outrage with the utmost sanctity. When this union is thus preserved (as I have often said) the most indifferent circumstance administers delight. Their condition is an endless source of new gratifications. The married man can say, if I am unacceptable to all the world beside, there is one whom I entirely love, that will receive me with joy and transport, and think herself obliged to double her kindness and caresses of me from the gloom with which she sees me overcast. I need not dissemble the sorrow of my heart to be agreeable there, that very sorrow quickens her affection.

THIS passion towards each other, when once well fixed enters into the very constitution, and the kindness flows as easily and silently as the blood in the veins. When this affection is enjoyed in the most sublime degree, unskilful eyes see nothing of it; but when it is subject to be changed, and has an allay in it that may make it end in distaste, it is apt to break into rage, or overflow into fondness, before the rest of the world.

UXANDER and Viramira are amorous and young, and have been married these two years; yet do they so much distinguish each other in company, that in your conversation with the dear things you are still put to a sort of cross purposes. Whenever you address yourself in ordinary discourse to Viramira, she turns her head another way, and the answer is made to the dear Uxander: If you tell a merry tale, the application is still directed to her dear; and when she should commend you, she says to him, as if he had spoke it, that is, my dear, so pretty—— this puts me in mind of that I have somewhere read in the admired memoirs of the famous Cervantes, where, while honest Sancho Pancha is putting some necessary humble question concerning Rozinante, his supper, or his lodgings, the knight of the woeful countenance is ever improving the harmless lowly hints of his squire to the poetical conceit, rapture and flight, in contemplation of the dear Dulcinea of his affections.

ON the other side, Dictamnus and Moria are ever squabbling, and you may observe them all the time they are in company, in a state of impatience. As Uxander and Viramira wish you all gone, that they may be at freedom for dalliance; Dictamnus and Moria wait your absence, that they may speak their harsh interpretations on each other's words and actions during the time you were with them.

It is certain that the greater part of the evils attending this condition of life, arises from fashion. Prejudice in this case is turned the wrong way, and instead of expecting more happiness than we shall meet with in it, we are laughed into a prepossession, that we shall be disappointed if we hope for lasting satisfactions.

With all persons who have made good sense the rule of action, marriage is described as the state capable of the highest human felicity. Tully has epistles full of affectionate pleasure, when he writes to his wife, or speaks of his children. But above all the hints of this kind I have met with in authors, I am pleased with an epigram of Martial in honour of the beauty of his wife Cleopatra. Commentators say it was written the day after his wedding night. When his spouse was retired to the bathing-room in the heat of the day, he, it seems, came in upon her when she was just going into the water. To her beauty and carriage on this occasion, we owe the following epigram, which I shewed my friend WILL HONEYCOMBE in French, who has translated it as follows, without understanding a word of the original. I expect it will please the English better than the Latin reader.

When my bright consort, now nor wife nor maid,
Asham'd and wanton, of embrace afraid,
Fled to the streams, the streams my fair betray'd:
To my fond eyes she all transparent stood,
She blush'd, I smil'd at the slight covering flood.
Thus through the glass the lovely lily glows,
Thus through the ambient gem shines forth the rose.
I saw new charms, and plung'd to seize my store,
Kisses I snatch'd, the waves prevented more.

My friend would not allow that this luscious account could be given of a wife, and therefore used the word confort; which he learnedly said, would serve for a mistress as well, and give a more gentlemanly turn to the epigram. But, under favour of him and all other such fine gentlemen, I cannot be persuaded but that the passion a bridegroom has for a virtuous young woman, will, by little and little, grow into friendship, and then it is ascended to a higher pleasure than it was in its first fervour. Without this happens, he is a very unfortunate man who has entered into this state, and left the habitudes of life he might have enjoyed with a faithful friend. But when the wife proves capable of filling serious as well as joyous hours, she brings happiness unknown to friendship itself. Spencer speaks of such kind of love with great justice, and attributes the highest praise to friendship; and indeed there is no disputing that point, but by making that friendship take place between two married persons.

Hard is the doubt, and difficult to deem,
When all three kinds of love together meet,
And do dispart the heart with power extreme,
Whether shall weigh the balance down; to wit,
The dear affection unto kindred sweet,
Or raging fire of love to womankind,
Or zeal of friends combin'd by virtues meet:
But, of them all, the band of virtuous mind
Methinks the gentle heart should most assured bind.

For natural affection soon doth cease,
And quenched is with Cupid's greater flame;
But faithful friendship doth them both suppress,
And them with mastering discipline doth tame,
Through thoughts aspiring to eternal fame.
For as the soul doth rule this earthly mass,
And all the service of the body frame;
So love of soul doth love of body pass,
No less than perfect gold surmounts the meanest brass.

No. 491. Tuesday, September 23.

—Digna satis fortuna revisit.

VIRG. ÆN. 3. v. 318.

A just reverse of fortune on him waits.

IT is common with me to run from book to book to exercise my mind with many objects, and qualify myself for my daily labours. After an hour spent in this loitering way of reading something will remain to be food to the imagination. The writings that please me most on such occasions are stories, for the truth of which there is good authority. The mind of man is naturally a lover of justice, and when we read a story wherein a criminal is overtaken, in whom there is no quality which is the object of pity, the soul enjoys a certain revenge for the offence done to its nature, in the wicked actions committed in the preceeding part of the history. This will be better understood by the reader from the following narration itself, than from any thing which I can say to introduce it.

WHEN Charles duke of Burgundy, surnamed The Bold, reigned over spacious provinces now swallowed up by the power of France, he heaped many favours and honours upon Claudius Rhynsfault, a German, who had served him in his wars against the insults of his neighbours. A great part of Zealand was at that time in subjection to that dukedom. The prince himself was a person of singular humanity and justice. Rhynsfault, with no other real quality than courage, had dissimulation enough to pass upon his generous and unsuspicious master for a person of blunt honesty and fidelity, without any vice that could bias him from the execution of justice. His Highness prepossessed to his advantage, upon the decease of the governor of his chief town of Zealand, gave Rhynfault that command. He was not long seated in that government, before he cast his eyes upon Sapphira, a woman of exquisite beauty, the wife of Paul Danvelt, a wealthy merchant of the city under his protection and government. Rhynfault was a man of a warm constitution, and violent inclination to women, and not unskilled in the soft arts which win their favour. He knew what it was to enjoy the satisfactions which are reaped from the possession of beauty, but was an utter stranger to the decencies, honours and delicacies that attend the passion towards them in elegant minds. However he had so much of the world, that he had a great share of the language which usually prevails upon the weaker part of that sex, and he could with his tongue utter a passion with which his heart was wholly untouched. He was one of those brutal minds which can be gratified with the violation of innocence and beauty without the least pity, passion, or love to that with which they are so much delighted. Ingratitude is a vice inseparable to a lustful man; and the possession of a woman by him who has no thought but allaying a passion painful to himself, is necessarily followed by distaste and aversion. Rhynfault being resolved to accomplish his will on the wife of Danvelt, left no arts untried to get into a familiarity at her house; but she knew his character and disposition too well, not to shun all occasions that might ensnare her into his conversation. The governor despairing of success by ordinary means, apprehended and imprisoned her husband, under a pretence of an information that he was guilty of a correspondence with the enemies of the duke to betray the town into their possession. This design had its desired effect; and the wife of the unfortunate Danvelt, the day before that which was appointed for his execution, presented herself in the hall of the governor's house, and as he passed through the apartment, threw herself at his feet, and holding his knees, beseeched his mercy.

Rhynsault beheld her with a dissembled satisfaction, and assuming an air of thought and authority, he bid her arise and told her she must follow him to his closet; and asking her whether she knew the hand of the letter he pulled out of his pocket, went from her, leaving this admonition aloud, “If you will save your husband, you must give me an account of all you know without prevarication: for every body is satisfied he was too fond of you to be able to hide from you the names of the rest of the conspirators, or any other particular whatsoever.” He went to his closet, and soon after the lady was sent for to an audience. The servant knew his distance when matters of state were to be debated; and the governor laying aside the air with which he had appeared in public, began to be the suppliant, to rally an affliction, which it was in her power easily to remove, and relieve an innocent man from his imprisonment. She easily perceived his intention, and, bathed in tears, began to deprecate so wicked a design. Lust, like ambition, takes all the faculties of the mind and body into its service and subjection. Her becoming tears, her honest anguish, the wringing of her hands, and the many changes of her posture and figure in the vehemence of speaking, were but so many attitudes in which he beheld her beauty, and farther incentives of his desire. All humanity was lost in that one appetite, and he signified to her in so many plain terms, that he was unhappy till he had possessed her, and nothing less should be the price of her husband’s life, and she must, before the following noon, pronounce the death or enlargement of Danvelt. After this notification, when he saw Sapphira enough again distracted to make the subject of their discourse to common eyes appear different from what it was, he called servants to conduct her to the gate. Loaded with unsupportable affliction, she immediately repairs to her husband, and having signified to his goalers, that she had a proposal to make to her husband from the governor, she was left alone with him, revealed to him all that had passed, and represented the endless conflict she was in between love to his person, and fidelity to his bed. It is easy to imagine the sharp affliction this honest pair was in upon such an incident, in lives not used to any but ordinary occurrences. The man was bridled by shame from speaking what his fear prompted, upon so near a prospect of death; but let fall words that signified to her, he should not think her polluted, though she had not yet confessed to him that the governor had violated her person, since he knew her will had no part in the action. She parted from him with this oblique permission to save a life he had not resolution enough to resign for the safety of his honour.

THE next morning the unhappy Sapphira attended the governor, and being led into a remote apartment, submitted to his desires. Rhynfault commended her charms, claimed a familiarity after what had passed between them, and with an air of gaiety, in the language of a gallant, bid her return, and take her husband out of prison: But, continued he, my fair one must not be offended that I have taken care he should not be an interruption to our future assignations. These last words foreboded what she found when she came to goal, her husband executed by the order of Rhynfault.

It was remarkable that a woman, who was full of tears and lamentations during the whole course of her affliction, uttered neither sigh nor complaint, but stood fixed with grief at this consummation of her misfortunes. She betook herself to her abode, and after having in solitude paid her devotions to him who is the avenger of innocence, she repaired privately to the court. Her person, and a certain grandeur of sorrow negligent of forms, gained her passage into the presence of the duke her sovereign. As soon as she came into the presence, she broke forth into the following words: "Behold, O mighty Charles, a wretch weary

 " of life, though it has always been spent with inno" cence and virtue. It is not in your power to re" dress my injuries, but it is to avenge them. And if " the protection of the distressed, and the punishment
 " of oppressors, is a task worthy of a prince, I bring
 " the duke of Burgundy ample matter for doing ho" nour to his own great name, and wiping infamy off
 " mine."

WHEN she had spoken this, she delivered the duke a paper reciting her story. He read it with all the emotions that indignation and pity could raise in a prince jealous of his honour in the behaviour of his officers, and prosperity of his subjects.

UPON an appointed day, Rhynsfault was sent for to court, and in the presence of a few of the council confronted by Sapphira: the prince asking, "Do you " know that lad?" Rhynsfault, as soon as he could recover his surprise, told the duke he would marry her, if his highness would please to think that a reparation. The duke seemed contented with this answer, and stood by during the immediate solemnization of the ceremony. At the conclusion of it he told Rhyn-sfault, "Thus far you have done as constrained by my " authority: I shall not be satisfied of your kind us" age of her, without you sign a gift of your whole e" state to her after your decease." To the performance of this also the duke was a witness. When these two acts were executed, the duke turned to the lady, and told her, It now remains for me to put you in quiet possession of what your husband has so bountifully bestowed on you: and ordered the immediate execution of Rhynsfault. T

No. 492. Wednesday, September 24.

Quicquid est boni moris levitate extinguitur. SEN.

Levity of behaviour is the bane of all that is good and virtuous.

Dear Mr SPECTATOR, Tunbridge, Sept. 18.

I AM a young woman of eighteen years of age, and I do assure you, a maid of unspotted reputation, founded upon a very careful carriage in all my looks, words, and actions. At the same time I must own to you, that 'tis with much constraint to flesh and blood that my behaviour is so irreproachable; for I am naturally addicted to mirth, to gaiety, to a free air, to motion and gadding. Now, what gives me a great deal of anxiety, and is some discouragement in the pursuit of virtue, is, that the young women who run into greater freedoms with the men are more taken notice of than I am. The men are such unthinking fots, that they do not prefer her who restrains all her passions and affections, and keeps much within the bounds of what is lawful, to her who goes to the utmost verge of innocence, and parleys at the very brink of vice, whether she shall be a wife or a mistress. But I must appeal to your spectatorial wisdom, who, I find, have passed very much of your time in the study of women, whether this is not a most unreasonable proceeding. I have read somewhere, that Hobbs of Malmsbury asserts, that continent persons have more of what they contain, than those who give a loose to their desires. According to this rule, let there be equal age, equal wit, and equal good humour, in the woman of prudence, and her of liberty; what stores has he to expect, who takes the former? what refuse must he be contented with, who chooses the latter? Well, but I sat down to write to you to vent my indignation against seve‘ral pert creatures who are addressed to and courted ‘in this place, while poor I, and two or three like me, ‘are wholly unregarded.

‘EVERY one of these affect gaining the hearts of ‘your sex. This is generally attempted by a particu‘lar manner of carrying themselves with familiarity.
‘Glycera has a dancing walk, and keeps time in her ‘ordinary gait. Chloe, her sister, who is unwilling ‘to interrupt her conquests, comes into the room be‘fore her with a familiar run. Dulcissa takes advan‘tage of the approach of the winter, and has intro‘duced a very pretty shiver; closing up her shoulders, ‘and shrinking as she moves. All that are in this ‘mode carry their fans between both hands before ‘them. Dulcissa herself, who is author of this air, ‘adds the pretty run to it; and has also, when she is ‘in very good humour, a taking familiarity in throw‘ing herself into the lowest seat in the room, and let‘ting her hoop’d petticoats fall with a lucky decency ‘about her. I know she practises this way of sitting ‘down in her chamber; and indeed she does it as well ‘as you may have seen an actress fall down dead in a ‘tragedy. Not the least indecency in her posture. If ‘you have observed what pretty carcases are carried ‘off at the end of a verse at the theatre, it will give ‘you a notion how Dulcissa plumps into a chair. Here ‘is a little country girl that’s very cunning, that makes ‘her use of being young and unbred, and outdoes the ‘insnarers, who are almost twice her age. The air ‘that she takes is to come into company after a walk,
‘and is very successfully out of breath upon occasion.
‘Her mother is in the secret, and calls her romp, and ‘then looks round to see what young men stare at her.

‘It would take up more than can come into one of ‘your papers, to enumerate all the particular airs of ‘the younger company in this place. But I cannot o‘mit Dulceorella, whose manner is the most indolent ‘imaginable, but still as watchful of conquest as the ‘ busiest virgin among us. She has a peculiar art of ‘ staring at a young fellow, till she sees she has got ‘ him, and inflamed him by so much observation. When ‘ she sees she has him, and he begins to toss his head ‘ upon it, she is immediately short sighted, and labours ‘ to observe what he is at a distance with her eyes half ‘ shut. Thus the captive, that thought her first struck, ‘ is to make nearer approaches, or be wholly disregar‘ ded. This artifice has done more execution than all ‘ the ogling of the rest of the women here, with the ‘ utmost variety of half glances, attentive heedlessnesses, ‘ childish inadvertencies, haughty contempts, or arti‘ ficial oversights. After I have said thus much of la‘ dies among us, who fight thus regularly, I am to ‘ complain to you of a set of familiar romps, who have ‘ broken through all common rules, and have thought ‘ of a very effectual way of shewing more charms than ‘ all of us. These, Mr SPECTATOR, are the swing‘ ers. You are to know these careless pretty creatures ‘ are very innocents again; and it is to be no matter ‘ what they do, for it is all harmless freedom. They ‘ get on ropes, as you must have seen the children, ‘ and are swung by their men visitants. The jest is,

‘ that Mr Such-a-one can name the colour of Mrs ‘ Such-a-one’s stockings; and she tells him, he is a ly‘ ing thief, so he is, and full of roguery; and she’ll lay ‘ a wager, and her sister shall tell the truth if he says ‘ right, and he can’t tell what colour her garters are ‘ of. In this diversion there are very many pretty ‘ shrieks, not so much for fear of falling, as that their ‘ petticoats should untye: For there is a great care ‘ had to avoid improprieties; and the lover who ‘ swings the lady, is to tie her cloaths very close with ‘ his hatband, before she admits him to throw up her ‘ heels.

‘ Now, Mr SPECTATOR, except you can note these ‘ wantonnesses in their beginnings and bring us sober ‘ girls into observation, there is no help for it, we must ‘ swim with the tide; the coquettes are too powerful

‘ a party for us. To look into the merit of a regular ‘ and well-behaved woman, is a slow thing. A loose ‘ trivial song gains the affections, when a wise homily ‘ is not attended to. There is no other way but to ‘ make war upon them, or we must go over to them.
 ‘ As for my part, I will shew all the world it is not for ‘ want of charms, that I stand so long unmasked; and ‘ if you do not take measures for the immediate re‘ dress of us rigids, as the fellows call us, I can move ‘ with a speaking mien, can look significantly, can lip, ‘ can trip, can loll, can start, can blush, can rage, can ‘ weep, if I must do it, and can be frightened as agreea‘ bly as any she in England. All which is humbly ‘ submitted to your spectatorial consideration with all ‘ humility, by

T

Your most humble servant,

MATILDA MOHAIR.

No. 493. Thursday, September 25.

Qualem commendes etiam atque etiam adspice, ne mox Incutiant aliena tibi peccata pudorem.

HOR. Ep. 18. l. i. v. 76.

*With cautious judgment, o'er and o'er,
 The man you recommend explore,
 Lest when the scoundrel's better known,
 You blush for errors not your own.*

FRANCIS.

IT is no unpleasant matter of speculation to consider the recommendatory epistles that pass round this town from hand to hand, and the abuse people put upon one another in that kind. It is indeed come to that pass, that instead of being the testimony of merit in the person recommended, the true reading of a letter of this sort is, The bearer hereof is so uneasy to me, that it will be an act of charity in you to take him off my hand: whether you prefer him or not, it is all one; for I have no manner of kindness for him, or obligation to him or his; and do what you please as to that. As negligent as men are in this respect, a point of honour is concerned in it; and there is nothing a man should be more ashamed of, than passing a worthless creature into the service or interests of a man who has never injured you. The women indeed are a little too keen in their resentments, to trespass often this way: but you shall sometimes know that the mistress and the maid shall quarrel, and give each other very free language, and at last the lady shall be pacified to turn her out of doors, and give her a very good word to any body else. Hence it is that you see, in a year and a half's time, the same face a domestic in all parts of the town. Good-breeding and good-nature lead people in a great measure to this injustice: when suitors of no consideration will have confidence enough to press upon their superiors, those in power are tender of speaking the exceptions they have against them, and are mortgaged into promises out of their impatience of importunity. In this latter case, it would be a very useful inquiry to know the history of recommendations: There are, you must know, certain abettors of this way of torment, who make it a profession to manage the affairs of candidates: These gentlemen let out their impudence to their clients, and supply any defective recommendation, by informing how such and such a man is to be attacked. They will tell you, get the least scrap from Mr Such-a-one, and leave the rest to him. When one of these undertakers have your business in hand, you may be sick, absent in town or country, and the patron shall be worried, or you prevail. I remember to have been shewn a gentleman some years ago, who punished a whole people for their facility in giving their credentials. This person had belonged to a regiment which did duty in the West-Indies, and by the mortality of the place happened to be commanding officer in the colony. He oppressed his subjects with frankness, 'till he became sensible that he was heartily hated by every man under his command. When he had carried his point, to be thus detestable, in a pretended fit of dishumour, and feigned uneasiness of living where he found he was so universally unacceptable, he communicated to the chief inhabitants a design he had to return to England, provided they would give him ample testimonials of their approbation. The planters came into it to a man, and in proportion to his deserving the quite contrary, the words Justice, Generosity, and Courage, were inserted in his commission, not omitting the general good liking of people of all conditions in the colony. The gentleman returns for England, and within a few months after came back to them their governor on the strength of their own testimonials.

SUCH a rebuke as this cannot indeed happen to easy recommenders, in the ordinary course of things from one hand to another; but how would a man bear to have it said to him, the person I took into confidence on the credit you gave him, has proved false, unjust, and has not answered any way the character you gave me of him.

I CANNOT but conceive very good hopes of that rake Jack Toper of the Temple, for an honest scrupulousness in this point. A friend of his meeting with a servant that had formerly lived with Jack, and having a mind to take him, sent to him to know what faults the fellow had, since he could not please such a careless fellow as he was. His answer was as follows:

S I R,

‘ T H O M A S that lived with me was turned away ‘ because he was too good for me. You know ‘ I live in taverns; he is an orderly sober rascal, and ‘ thinks much to sleep in an entry till two in a morn‘ ing. He told me one day when he was dressing me, ‘ that he wondered I was not dead before now, since

‘ I went to dinner in the evening, and went to supper ‘ at two in the morning. We were coming down ‘ Essex-street one night a little fluster’d, and I was giv‘ ing him the word to alarm the watch; he had the ‘ impudence to tell me it was against the law. You ‘ that are married, and live one day after another the ‘ same way, and so on the whole week, I dare say will ‘ like him, and he will be glad to have his meat in due ‘ season. The fellow is certainly very honest. My ‘ service to your lady. Yours, J. T.

Now, this was very fair dealing. Jack knew very well, that tho’ the love of order made a man very awkward in his equipage, it was a valuable quality among the queer people who live by rule; and had too much good sense and good nature to let the fellow starve, because he was not fit to attend his vivacities.

I SHALL end this discourse with a letter of recommendation from Horace to Claudius Nero. You will see in that letter a slowness to ask a favour, a strong reason for being unable to deny his good word any longer, and that it is a service to the person to whom he recommends to comply with what is asked: All which are necessary circumstances, both in justice and good-breeding, if a man would ask so as to have reason to complain of a denial; and indeed a man should not in strictness ask otherwise. In hopes the authority of Horace, who perfectly understood how to live with great men, may have a good effect towards amending this facility in people of condition, and the confidence of those who apply to them without merit, I have translated the epistle.

To CLAUDIUS NERO.

S I R,

SEPTIMIUS, who waits upon you with this, is very well acquainted with the place you are pleased to allow me in your friendship. For when he be-

' sees me to recommend him to your notice, in such ' a manner as to be received by you, who are delicate
 ' in the choice of your friends and domestics, he knows
 ' our intimacy, and understands my ability to serve him
 ' better than I do myself. I have defended myself a' gainst his ambition to be yours, as long as I possibly ' could; but fearing the imputation of hiding my power
 ' in you out of mean and selfish considerations, I am
 ' at last prevailed upon to give you this trouble. Thus,
 ' to avoid the appearance of a greater fault, I have put
 ' on this confidence. If you can forgive this trans' gression of modesty in behalf of a friend, receive this ' gentleman into your interests and friendship, and
 ' take it from me, that he is an honest and a brave man.

T

No. 494. Friday, September 26.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Ægritudinem laudare, unam rem maxime detestabilem, quorum est tandem philosophorum? CIC.

What kind of philosophy is it, to extol melancholy, the most detestable thing in nature?

ABOUT an age ago it was the fashion in England, for every one that would be thought religious, to throw as much sanctity as possible into his face, and in particular to abstain from all appearances of mirth and pleasantry, which were looked upon as the marks of a carnal mind. The saint was of a forrowful countenance, and generally eaten up with spleen and melancholy. A gentleman, who was lately a great ornament to the learned world, has diverted me more than once with an account of the reception which he met with from a very famous independent minister, who was head of a college in those times. This gentleman was then a young adventurer in the republic of letters, and just fitted out for the university with a good cargo of Latin and Greek. His friends were resolved that he should try his fortune at an election which was drawing near in the college, of which the independent minister whom I have before mentioned was governor. The youth, according to custom, waited on him in order to be examined. He was received at the door by a servant, who was one of that gloomy generation that were then in fashion. He conducted him, with great silence and seriousness, to a long gallery which was darkened at noon-day, and had only a single candle burning in it. After a short stay in this melancholy apartment, he was led into a chamber hung with black, where he entertained himself for some time by the glimmering of a taper, 'till at length the head of the college came out to him, from an inner room, with half a dozen nightcaps upon his head, and religious horror in his countenance. The young man trembled; but his fears increased, when, instead of being asked what progress he had made in learning, he was examined how he abounded in grace. His Latin and Greek stood him in little stead; he was to give an account only of the state of his soul, whether he was of the number of the elect; what was the occasion of his conversion; upon what day of the month, and hour of the day it happened; how it was carried on, and when completed. The whole examination was summed up with one short question, namely, Whether he was prepared for death? The boy, who had been bred up by honest parents, was frightened out of his wits at the solemnity of the proceeding, and by the last dreadful interrogatory; so that upon making his escape out of the house of mourning, he could never be brought a second time to the examination, as not being able to go through the terrors of it.

NOTWITHSTANDING this general form and outside of religion is pretty well worn out among us, there are many persons, who, by a natural uncheerfulness of heart, mistaken notions of piety, or weakness of understanding, love to indulge this uncomfortable way of life, and give up themselves a prey to grief and melancholy. Superstitious fears and groundless scruples cut them off from the pleasures of conversation, and all those social entertainments which are not only innocent, but laudable: as if mirth was made for reprobates, and cheerfulness of heart denied those who are the only persons that have a proper title to it.

SOMBRIUS is one of these sons of sorrow. He thinks himself obliged in duty to be sad and disconsolate. He looks on a sudden fit of laughter as a breach of his baptismal vow. An innocent jest startles him like blasphemy. Tell him of one who is advanced to a title of honour, he lifts up his hands and eyes; describe a public ceremony, he shakes his head: shew him a gay equipage, he blesses himself. All the little ornaments of life are pomps and vanities. Mirth is wanton, and wit profane. He is scandalized at youth for being lively, and at childhood for being playful. He sits at a christening, or a marriage feast, as at a funeral; sighs at the conclusion of a merry story, and grows devout when the rest of the company grow pleasant. After all, Sombrius is a religious man, and would have behaved himself very properly, had he lived when christianity was under a general persecution.

I would by no means presume to tax such characters with hypocrisy, as is done too frequently; that being a vice which I think none but he, who knows the secrets of men's hearts, should pretend to discover in another, where the proofs of it do not amount to a demonstration. On the contrary, as there are many excellent persons, who are weighed down by this habitual sorrow of heart, they rather deserve our compassion than our reproaches. I think, however, they would do well to consider whether such a behaviour does not deter men from a religious life, by representing it as an unsociable state, that extinguishes all joy and gladness, darkens the face of nature, and destroys the relish of being itself.

I HAVE, in former papers, shewn how great a tendency there is to chearfulness in religion, and how such a frame of mind is not only the most lovely, but the most commendable in a virtuous person. In short, those who represent religion in so unamiable a light, are like the spies sent by Moses to make a discovery of the land of Promise, when by their reports they discouraged the people from entering upon it. Those who shew us the joy, the chearfulness, the good-humour, that naturally spring up in this happy state, are like the spies bringing along with them the clusters of grapes, and delicious fruits, that might invite their companions into the pleasant country which produced them.

AN eminent Pagan writer has made a discourse, to shew that the atheist, who denies, a God, does himself dishonour than the man who owns his being, but at the same time believes him to be cruel, hard to please and terrible to human nature. For my own part, says he, I would rather it should be said of me, that there was never any such man as Plutarch, than that Plutarch was ill-natured, capricious, or inhumane.

IF we may believe our logicians, man is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter. He has a heart capable of mirth, and naturally disposed to it. It is not the business of virtue to extirpate the affections of the mind, but to regulate them. It may moderate and restrain, but was not designed to banish gladness from the heart of man. Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatiate in. The contemplation of the divine Being, and the exercise of virtue are in their own nature so far from excluding all gladness of heart, that they are perpetual sources of it. In a word, the true spirit of religion cheers, as well as composes the soul; it banishes indeed all levity of behaviour, all vicious and dissolute mirth, but in exchange fills the mind with a perpetual serenity, uninterrupted chearfulness, and an habitual inclination to please others, as well as to be pleased in itself. O

No. 495. Saturday, September 27.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

*Duris ut ilex tonsa bipennibus Nigræ feraci frondis in algido,
 Per damna, per cædes, ab ipso Ducit opes animumque ferro*

HOR. OD. 4. l. 4. v. 57.

—Like an oak upon the woody top
 Of shaded Algidus, bestrow'd with leaves,
 Which as keen axes its green honours lop,
 Through wounds, through losses no decay can feel,
 Collecting strength, and spirit from the steel.

FRANCIS.

AS I am one, who, by my profession, am obliged to look into all kinds of men, there are none whom I consider with so much pleasure, as those who have any thing new or extraordinary in their characters, or ways of living. For this reason I have often amused myself with speculations on the race of people called Jews, many of whom I have met with in most of the considerable towns which I have passed through in the course of my travels. They are, indeed, so diffused through all the trading parts of the world, that they are become the instruments by which the most distant nations converse with one another, and by which mankind are knit together in a general correspondence: they are like the pegs and nails in a great building, which, tho' they are but little valued in themselves, are absolutely necessary to keep the whole frame together.

THAT I may not fall into any common beaten tracks of observation, I shall consider this people in three views: First, with regard to their number; Secondly, their dispersion; and, Thirdly, their adherence to their religion: and afterwards endeavour to shew,

First, what natural reasons, and, Secondly, what providential reasons may be assigned for these three remarkable particulars.

THE Jews are looked upon by many to be as numerous at present, as they were formerly in the land of Canaan.

THIS is wonderful, considering the dreadful slaughter made of them under some of the Roman emperors, which historians describe by the death of many hundred thousands in a war; and the innumerable massacres and persecutions they have undergone in Turkey, as well as in all Christian nations of the world. The Rabbins, to express the great havoc which has been sometimes made of them, tell us, after their usual manner of hyperbole, that there were such torrents of holy blood shed as carried rocks of an hundred yards in circumference above three miles into the sea.

THEIR dispersion is the second remarkable particular in this people. They swarm over all the East; and are settled in the remotest parts of China; they are spread through most of the nations of Europe, and Afric, and many families of them are established in the West-Indies: not to mention whole nations bordering on Prester-John's country, and some discovered in the inner parts of America, if we may give any credit to their own writers.

THEIR firm adherence to their religion, is no less remarkable than their numbers and dispersion, especially considering it as persecuted or contemned over the face of the whole earth. This is likewise the more remarkable, if we consider the frequent apostasies of this people, when they lived under their kings, in the land of Promise, and within sight of their temple.

IF in the next place we examine, what may be the natural reasons for these three particulars which we find in the Jews, and which are not to be found in any other religion or people, I can, in the first place, attribute their numbers to nothing but their constant employment, their abstinence, their exemption from wars, and above all, their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accursed state, and generally are married before twenty, as hoping the Messiah may descend from them.

THE dispersion of the Jews into all the nations of the earth, is the second remarkable particular of that people, though not so hard to be accounted for. They were always in rebellions and tumults while they had the temple and holy city in view, for which reason they have often been driven out of their old habitations in the land of Promise. They have as often been banished out of most other places where they have settled, which must very much disperse and scatter a people, and oblige them to seek a livelihood where they can find it. Besides, the whole people is now a race of such merchants as are wanderers by profession, and at the same time, are in most, if not all, places incapable of either lands or offices, that might engage them to make any part of the world their home.

THIS dispersion would probably have lost their religion, had it not been secured by the strength of its constitution: for they are to live all in a body, and generally within the same inclosure; to marry among themselves, and to eat no meats that are not killed or prepared their own way. This shuts them out from all table conversation, and the most agreeable intercourses of life; and, by consequence, excludes them from the most probable means of conversion.

IF, in the last place, we consider what providential reason may be assigned for these three particulars, we shall find that their numbers, dispersion, and adherence to their religion, have furnished every age, and every nation of the world, with the strongest arguments for the Christian faith, not only as these very particulars are foretold of them, but as they themselves are the depositaries of these and all the other prophecies, which tend to their own confusion. Their number furnishes us with a sufficient cloud of witnesses that attest the truth of the old Bible. Their dispersion spreads these witnesses through all parts of the world. The adherence to their religion makes their testimony unquestionable. Had the whole body of the Jews been converted to Christianity, we should certainly have thought all the prophecies of the old Testament, that relate to the coming and history of our blessed Saviour, forged by Christians, and have looked upon them, with the prophecies of the Sibyls, as made many years after the events they pretended to foretel. O

No. 496. Monday, September 29.

Gnatum pariter uti his decuit, aut etiam amplius, Quod illa ætas magis ad hæc utenda idonea est.

TERENT. Heaut. act. 1. sc. 1.

Your son ought to have shared in these things, because youth is best suited to the enjoyment of them.

Mr SPECTATOR,

THOSE ancients who were the most accurate in their remarks on the genius and temper of mankind, by considering the various bent and scope of our actions throughout the progress of life, have with great exactness allotted inclinations and objects of desire particular to every stage, according to the different circumstances of our conversation and fortune, thro' the several periods of it. Hence they were disposed easily to excuse those excesses which might possibly arise from a too eager pursuit of the affections more immediately proper to each state: they indulged the levity of childhood with tenderness, overlooked the gaiety of youth with good nature, tempered the forward ambition and impatience of ripened manhood with discretion, and kindly imputed the tenacious avarice of old men to their want of relish for any other enjoyment. Such allowances as these were no less advantageous to common society than obliging to particular persons; for by maintaining a decency and regularity in the course of life, they supported the dignity of human nature, which then suffers the greatest violence when the order of things is inverted; and in nothing is it more remarkably vilified and ridiculous, than when feebleness preposterously attempts to adorn itself with that outward pomp and lustre, which serve only to set off the bloom of youth with better advantage. I was insensibly carried into reflexions of this nature, by just now meeting Paulino (who is in his climacteric) bedecked with the utmost splendor of dress and equipage, and giving an unbounded loose to all manner of pleasure, whilst his only son is debarred all innocent diversion, and may be seen frequently solacing himself in the Mall with no other attendance than one antiquated servant of his father's for a companion and director.

It is a monstrous want of reflexion, that a man cannot consider, that, when he cannot resign the pleasures of life in his decay of appetite and inclination to them, his son must have a much uneasier task to resist the impetuosity of growing desires. The skill therefore should, methinks, be to let a son want no lawful diversion, in proportion to his future fortune, and the figure he is to make in the world. The first step towards virtue that I have observed in young men of condition that have run into excesses, has been that they had a regard to their quality and reputation in the management of their vices. Narrowness in their circumstances has made many youths, to supply themselves as debauchees, commence cheats and rascals. The father who allows his son to the utmost of his ability avoids this latter evil, which as ' to the world is much greater than the former. But ' the contrary practice has prevailed so much among ' some men, that I have known them deny them what ' was merely necessary for education suitable to their ' quality. Poor young Antonio is a lamentable in' stance of ill conduct in this kind. The young man

 ' did not want natural talents; but the father of him
 ' was a coxcomb, who affected being a fine gentleman
 ' so unmercifully, that he could not endure in his sight,
 ' or the frequent mention of, one who was his son,
 ' growing into manhood, and thrusting him out of ' the gay world. I have often thought the father
 ' took a secret pleasure in reflecting, that when that
 ' fine house and seat came into the next hands, it ' would revive his memory, as a person who knew how ' to enjoy them, from observation of the rusticity and ' ignorance of his successor. Certain it is that a man ' may, if he will, let his heart close to the having no
 ' regard to any thing but his dear self, even with ex' clusion of his very children. I recommend this sub' ject to your consideration, and am,

Sir, your most humble servant, T. P.

Mr SPECTATOR,

London, Sept. 26. 1712.

' I AM just come from Tunbridge, and have since my ' return read Mrs Matilda Mohair's letter to you:
 ' she pretends to make a mighty story about the di' version of swinging in that place. What was done,
 ' was only among relations; and no man swung any ' woman who was not second cousin at farthest. She ' is pleased to say, care was taken that the gallants
 ' tied the ladies legs before they were waisted into the ' air. Since she is so spiteful, I'll tell you the plain ' truth, there was no such nicety observed, since we ' were all, as I just now told you, near relations; but
 ' Mrs Mohair herself has been swung there, and she
 ' invents all this malice, because it was observed she
 ' has crooked legs, of which I was an eye-witness.

Your humble servant,

RICHARD SHOESTRING.

Mr SPECTATOR,

Tunbridge, Sept. 26. 1712.

WE have just now read your paper, containing Mrs Mohair's letter. It is an invention of her own from one end to the other; and I desire you would print the inclosed letter by itself, and shorten it so as to come within the compass of your half-sheet. She is the most malicious minx in the world, for all she looks so innocent. Don't leave out that part about her being in love with her father's butler, which makes her shun men; for that is the truest of it all.

Your humble servant,

SARAH TRICE.

P. S. SHE has crooked legs.

Mr SPECTATOR,

Tunbridge, Sept. 26. 1712.

ALL that Mrs Mohair is so vexed at against the good company of this place, is, that we all know she has crooked legs. This is certainly true. I don't care for putting my name, because one would not be in the power of the creature.

Your humble servant unknown.

Mr SPECTATOR,

Tunbridge, Sept. 26. 1712.

THAT insufferable prude Mrs Mohair, who has told such stories of the company here, is with child, for all her nice airs and her crooked legs. Pray be sure to put her in for both these two things, and you'll oblige every body here, especially

T

Your humble servant,

ALICE BLUEGARTER.

No. 497. Tuesday, September 30.

Ουτος εστι γαλιωτης γερον.

Menander.

A cunning old fox this!

FAVOUR well bestowed is almost as great an honour to him who confers it, as to him who receives it. What indeed makes for the superior reputation of the patron in this case, is, that he is always surrounded with specious pretences of unworthy candidates, and is often alone in the kind inclination he has towards the well-deserving. Justice is the first quality in the man who is in a post of direction: and I remember to have heard an old gentleman talk of the civil wars, and in his relation give an account of a general officer, who with this one quality, without any shining endowments, became so peculiarly beloved and honoured, that all decisions between man and man were laid before him, by the parties concerned, in a private way: and they would lay by their animosities implicitly, if he bid them be friends, or submit themselves in the wrong without reluctance, if he said it, without waiting the judgment of court martials. His manner was to keep the dates of all commissions in his closet, and wholly dismiss from the service such as were deficient in their duty; and after that took care to prefer according to the order of battle. His familiars were his entire friends, and could have no interested views in courting his acquaintance; for his affection was no step to their preferment, though it was to their reputation. By this means a kind aspect, a salutation, a smile, and giving out his hand, had the weight of what is esteemed by vulgar minds more substantial. His business was very short, and he who had nothing to do but justice, was never affronted with a request of a familiar daily visitant for what was due to a brave man at a distance. Extraordinary merit he used to recommend to the king for some distinction at home, till the order of battle made way for his rising in the troops. Add to this, that he had an excellent manner of getting rid of such whom he observed were good at a Halt, as his phrase was. Under this description he comprehended all those who were contented to live without reproach, and had no promptitude in their minds towards glory. These fellows were also recommended to the king, and taken off the general's hands into posts wherein diligence and common honesty were all that were necessary. This general had no weak part in his line, but every man had as much care upon him, and as much honour to lose as himself. Every officer could answer for what passed where he was, and the general's presence was never necessary any where but where he had placed himself at the first disposition except any accident happened from extraordinary efforts of the enemy which he could not foresee, but it was remarkable, that it never fell out from failure in his own troops. It must be confessed the world is just so much out of order, as an unworthy person possesses what should be in the direction of him who has better pretensions to it.

INSTEAD of such a conduct as this old fellow used to describe in his general, all the evils which have ever happened among mankind have arose from the wanton disposition of the favours of the powerful. It is generally all that men of modesty and virtue can do, to fall in with some whimsical turn in a great man, to make way for things of real and absolute service. In the time of Don Sebastian of Portugal, or some time since, the first minister would let nothing come near him but what bore the most profound face of wisdom and gravity. They carried it so far, that, for the greater shew of their profound knowledge, a pair of spectacles tied on their noses, with a black ribbon round their heads, was what compleated the dress of those who made their court at his levee, and none with naked noses were admitted to his presence. A blunt honest fellow, who had a command in the train of artillery, had attempted to make an impression upon the porter day after day in vain, till at last he made his appearance in a very thoughtful dark suit of clothes, and two pair of spectacles on at once. He was conducted from room to room with great deference to the minister; and carrying on the farce of the place, he told his excellence that he had in this manner pretended to be wiser than he really was, but with no ill intention; but he was honest such-a-one of the train, and he came to tell him that they wanted wheel-barrows and pick-axes. The thing happened not to displease, the great man was seen to smile, and the successful officer was reconducted with the same profound ceremony out of the house.

WHEN Leo X. reigned pope of Rome, his holiness, though a man of sense, and of an excellent taste of letters, of all things affected fools, buffoons, humourists, and coxcombs: whether it were from vanity, and that he enjoyed no talents in other men but what were inferior to him; or whatever it was, he carried it so far, that his whole delight was in finding out new fools, and, as our phrase is, playing them off, and making them shew themselves to advantage. A priest of his former acquaintance suffered a great many disappointments in attempting to find access to him in a regular character, till at last in despair he retired from Rome, and returned in an equipage so very fantastical, both as to the dress of himself and his servants, that the whole court were in an emulation who should first introduce him to his holiness. What added to the expectation his holiness had of the pleasure he should have in his follies, was, that this fellow, in a dress the most exquisitely ridiculous, desired he might speak to him alone, for he had matters of the highest importance, upon which he wanted a conference. Nothing could be denied to a coxcomb of so great hope: but when they were apart, the impostor revealed himself, and spoke as follows:

DO not be surpris'd, most holy father, at seeing, instead of a coxcomb to laugh at, your old friend, who has taken this way of access to admonish you of your own folly. Can any thing shew your holiness how unworthily you treat mankind, more than my being put upon this difficulty to speak with you? It is a degree of folly to delight to see it in others, and it is the greatest insolence imaginable to rejoice in the disgrace of human nature. It is a criminal humility in a person of your holiness's understanding, to believe you cannot excel but in the conversation of half-wits, humourists, coxcombs and buffoons. If your holiness has a mind to be diverted like a rational man, you have a great opportunity for it, in disrobing all the impertinents you have favoured, of all their riches and trappings at once, and bestowing them on the humble, the virtuous, and the meek. If your holiness is not concerned for the sake of virtue and religion, be pleased to reflect, that for the sake of your own safety, it is not proper to be so very much in jest. When the pope is thus merry, the people will in time begin to think many things, which they have hitherto beheld with great veneration, are in themselves objects of scorn and derision. If they once get a trick of knowing how to laugh, your holiness's saying this sentence with one night-cap, and t'other with the other, the change of your slippers, bringing you your staff in the midst of a prayer, then stripping you of one vest, and clapping on a second during divine service, will be found out to have nothing in it. Consider, Sir, that at this rate a head will be reckoned never the wiser for being bald, and the ignorant will be apt to say, that going barefoot does not at all help on in the way to heaven. The red cap and the cowl will fall under the same contempt; and the vulgar will tell us to our faces, that we shall have no authority over them, but from the force of our arguments, and the sanctity of our lives. T

No. 498. Wednesday, October 1.

—Frustra retinacula tendens

Fertur equis auriga, neque audit currus habenas.

VIRG. Georg. 1. v. 514.

*Nor reins, nor curbs, nor cries, the horses fear,
But force along the trembling charioteer.* DRYDEN.

TO the SPECTATOR GENERAL of Great-Britain.

From the further end of the widow's coffeehouse in Devereux court, Monday evening, twenty eight minutes and a half past six.

Dear Dumb,

IN short, to use no farther preface, if I should tell you that I have seen a hackney-coachman, when he has come to set down his fare, which has consisted of two or three very fine ladies, hand them out, and salute every one of them with an air of familiarity, without giving the least offence, you would perhaps think me guilty of a Gasconade. But to clear myself from that imputation, and to explain this matter to you, I assure you, that there are many illustrious youths within this city, who frequently recreate themselves by driving of a hackney-coach: but those whom above all others, I would recommend to you, are the young gentlemen belonging to our inns of court. We have, I think, about a dozen coachmen who have chambers here in the Temple: and as it is reasonable to believe others will follow their example, we may perhaps in time (if it should be thought convenient) be drove to Westminster by our own fraternity, allowing every fifth person to apply his meditations this way, which is but a modest computation as the humour is now likely to take. It is to be hoped likewise, that there are in the other nurseries of the law to be found a proportionable number of those hopeful plants

‘ springing up to the everlasting renown of their na‘ tive country. Of how long standing this humour has ‘ been, I know not; the first time I had any particu‘ lar reason to take notice of it was about this time ‘ twelvemonth, when being upon Hampstead heath ‘ with some of these studious young men, who went ‘ thither purely for the sake of contemplation, no‘ thing would serve them, but I must go through a ‘ course of this philosophy too; and being ever will‘ ing to embellish myself with any commendable qua‘ lification, it was not long ere they persuaded me into ‘ the coach box; nor indeed much longer before I un‘ derwent the fate of my brother Phaeton; for hav‘ ing drove about fifty paces with pretty good success, ‘ through my own natural sagacity, together with the ‘ good instructions of my tutors, who, to give them ‘ their due, were on all hands encouraging and assist‘ ing me in this laudable undertaking; I say, Sir, hav‘ ing drove about fifty paces with pretty good success,
‘ I must needs be exercising the lash, which the horses ‘ resented so ill at my hands, that they gave a sudden ‘ start, and thereby pitched me directly upon my head, ‘ as I very well remembered about half an hour after‘ wards, which not only deprived me of all the know‘ ledge I had gained for fifty yards before, but had ‘ like to have broke my neck into the bargain. Af‘ ter such a severe reprimand, you may imagine I was ‘ not very easily prevailed with to make a second at‘ tempt; and indeed, upon mature deliberation, the ‘ whole science seemed, at least to me, to be surround‘ ed with so many difficulties, that notwithstanding the ‘ unknown advantages which might have accrued to ‘ me thereby, I gave over all hopes of attaining it;
‘ and I believe had never thought of it more, but that ‘ my memory has been lately refreshed, by seeing some ‘ of these ingenious gentlemen ply in the open streets, ‘ one of which I saw receive so suitable a reward of ‘ his labours, that though I know you are no friend to ‘ story-telling, yet I must beg leave to trouble you with ‘ this at large.

‘ ABOUT a fortnight since, as I was diverting myself ‘ with a pennyworth of walnuts at the temple-gate, a ‘ lively young fellow in a fustian jacket shot by me, ‘ beckoned a coach, and told the coachman he wanted ‘ to go as far as Chelsea: they agreed upon the ‘ price, and this young gentleman mounts the coach-‘ box; the fellow staring at him, desired to know, if ‘ he should not drive till they were out of the town?
‘ No, no, replied he: he was then going to climb up ‘ to him, but received another check, and was ordered ‘ to get into the coach, or behind it, for that he wanted ‘ no instructors; but be sure you dog you, says he, ‘ don’t you bilk me. The fellow thereupon surrendered ‘ his whip, scratched his head, and crept into ‘ the coach. Having myself occasion to go into the ‘ Strand about the same time, we started both together:
‘ but the street being very full of coaches,
‘ and he not so able a coachman as perhaps he imagined ‘ himself, I had soon got a little way before him; ‘ often, however, having the curiosity to cast my eye ‘ back upon him, to observe how he behaved himself ‘ in this high station; which he did with great com‘ posure, till he came to the pass, which is a military ‘ term the brothers of the whip have given the strait ‘ at St Clement’s church: when he arrived near this ‘ place, where are always coaches in waiting, the ‘ coachmen began to suck up the muscles of their ‘ cheeks, and to tip the wink upon each other, as if ‘ they had some roguery in their heads, which I was ‘ immediately convinced of; for he no sooner came ‘ within reach, but the first of them with his whip ‘ took the exact dimensions of his shoulders, which he ‘ very ingeniously called Endorsing; and indeed I must ‘ say, that every one of them took due care to endorse ‘ him as he came through their hands. He seemed at ‘ first a little uneasy under the operation, and was going in all haste to take the numbers of their coaches ;

but at length, by the mediation of the worthy gentleman in the coach, his wrath was asswaged, and he prevailed upon to pursue his journey ; though indeed I thought they had clapt such a spoke in his wheel, as had disabled him from being a coachman for that day at least : for I am only mistaken, Mr SPEC, if some of these endorsements were not wrote in so strong a hand, that they are still legible. Upon my enquiring the reason of this unusual salutation, they told me, that it was a custom among them, whenever they saw a brother tottering or unstable in his post, to lend him a hand, in order to settle him again therein : for my part I thought their allegations but reasonable, and so marched off. Besides our coachmen, we abound in divers other sorts of ingenious robust youth, who, I hope, will not take it ill if I refer giving you an account of their several recreations to another opportunity. In the meantime, if you would bestow but a little of your wholesome advice upon our coachmen, it might perhaps be a reprieve to some of their necks. As I understand you have several inspectors under you, if you would but send one amongst us here in the Temple, I am persuaded he would not want employment. But I leave this to your own consideration, and am,

Sir, your very humble servant,

MOSES GREENBAG.

P. S. I HAVE heard our critics in the coffeehouses hereabout talk mightily of the unity of time and place : according to my notion of the matter, I have endeavoured at something like it in the beginning of my epistle. I desire to be informed a little as to that particular. In my next I design to give you some account of excellent watermen who are bred to the law, and far outdo the land-students above-mentioned.

T

No. 499. Thursday, October 2.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

———Nimis uncis

Naribus indulges——— PERS. Sat. I. v. 40.

———You drive the jest too far. DRYDEN.

MY friend WILL HONEYCOMB has told me, for above this half year, that he had a great mind to try his hand at a Spectator, and that he would fain have one of his writing in my works. This morning I received from him the following letter, which, after having rectified some little orthographical mistakes, I shall make a present of to the public.

Dear SPEC,

I WAS, about two nights ago, in company with very agreeable young people of both sexes, where talking of some of your papers which are written on conjugal love, there arose a dispute among us whether there were not more bad husbands in the world than bad wives. A gentleman, who was advocate for the ladies, took this occasion to tell us the story of a famous siege in Germany, which I have since found related in my historical dictionary after the following manner. When the emperor Conrade the third, had besieged Guelphus, duke of Bavaria, in the city of Hensberg, the women finding the town could not possibly hold out long, petitioned the emperor that they might depart out of it, with so much as each of them could carry. The emperor knowing they could not convey away many of their effects, granted them their petition; when the women, to his great surprise, came out of the place with every one her husband upon her back. The emperor was so moved at the sight, that he burst into tears, and after having very much extolled the women for their conjugal affection, gave the men to their wives, and received the duke into his favour.

‘ THE ladies did not a little triumph at this story, ‘ asking us at the same time, whether in our consci‘ ences we believed that the men in any town of Great ‘ Britain would, upon the same offer, and at the same ‘ conjuncture, have loaded themselves with their wives; ‘ or rather, whether they would not have been glad of ‘ such an opportunity to get rid of them? To this my ‘ very good friend Tom Dapperwit, who took upon him ‘ to be the mouth of our sex, replied that they would ‘ be very much to blame if they would not do the ‘ same good office for the women, considering that ‘ their strength would be greater, and their burdens ‘ lighter. As we were amusing ourselves with dis‘ courses of this nature in order to pass away the e‘ vening, which now begins to grow tedious, we fell ‘ into that laudable and primitive diversion of questi‘ ons and commands. I was no sooner vested with the ‘ regal authority, but I enjoined all the ladies under ‘ pain of my displeasure, to tell the company ingenu‘ ously, in case they had been in the siege above men‘ tioned, and had the same offers made them as the ‘ good women of that place, what every one of them ‘ would have brought off with her, and have thought ‘ most worth the saving? There were several merry ‘ answers made to my question, which entertained us ‘ till bed-time. This filled my mind with such a huddle ‘ of ideas, that upon my going to sleep, I fell into the ‘ following dream.

‘ I SAW a town of this island, which shall be name‘ less, invested on every side, and the inhabitants of it ‘ so straitened as to cry for quarter. The general re‘ fused any other terms than those granted to the a‘ bove mentioned town of Hensberg, namely, that the ‘ married women might come out with what they ‘ could bring along with them. Immediately the ci‘ ty-gates flew open, and a female procession appear‘ ed, multitudes of the sex following one another in a ‘ row, and staggering under their respective burdens.

‘ I took my stand upon an eminence in the enemies ‘ camp, which was appointed for the general rendez‘ vous of these female carriers, being desirous to look ‘ into their several loadings. The first of them had a ‘ huge sack upon her shoulders, which she set down ‘ with great care: upon the opening of it, when I ex‘ pected to have seen her husband shot out of it, I ‘ found it was filled with china ware. The next ap‘ peared in a more decent figure, carrying a handsome ‘ young fellow upon her back: I could not forbear ‘ commending the young woman for her conjugal af‘ fection, when, to my great surprise, I found that she ‘ had left the good man at home, and brought away ‘ her gallant. I saw a third, at some distance, with ‘ a little withered face peeping over her shoulder, ‘ whom I could not suspect for any but her spouse, ‘ till upon her setting him down I heard her call him
‘ dear pug, and found him to be her favourite monkey.
‘ A fourth brought a huge bale of cards along with ‘ her: and the fifth a Bolonia lap-dog, for her hus‘ band, it seems, being a very burly man, she thought ‘ it would be less trouble for her to bring away little ‘ Cupid. The next was the wife of a rich usurer, loa-‘ den with a bag of gold; she told us that her spouse ‘ was very old, and by the course of nature could not ‘ expect to live long; and that to shew her tender re‘ gards for him, she had saved that which the poor ‘ man loved better than his life. The next came to‘ wards us with her son upon her back, who, we were ‘ told, was the greatest rake in the place, but so much ‘ the mother’s darling, that she left her husband be‘ hind, with a large family of hopeful sons and daugh‘ ters, for the sake of this graceless youth.

‘ It would be endless to mention the several persons, ‘ with their several loads that appeared to me in this ‘ strange vision. All the place about me was covered ‘ with packs of ribbons, brocades, embroidery, and ten ‘ thousand other materials, sufficient to have furnish‘ ed a whole street of toy-shops. One of the women, ‘ having an husband who was none of the heaviest,

‘ was bringing him off upon her shoulders, at the same ‘ time that she carried a great bundle of Flanders lace ‘ under her arm; but finding herself so over loaden, ‘ that she could not save both of them, she dropped the ‘ good man, and brought away the bundle. In short,
‘ I found but one husband among this great mountain ‘ of baggage, who was a lively cobbler, that kick’d and ‘ spurr’d all the while his wife was carrying him on,
‘ and, as it was said, had scarce passed a day in his life ‘ without giving her the discipline of the strap.

‘ I CANNOT conclude my letter, dear SPEC, without ‘ telling thee one very odd whim in my dream. I saw, ‘ methought, a dozen women employed in bringing ‘ off one man; I could not guess who it should be, till ‘ upon his nearer approach I discovered thy short phiz.
‘ The women all declared that it was for the sake of ‘ thy works, and not thy person, that they brought ‘ thee off, and that it was on condition that thou ‘ should’st continue the SPECTATOR. If thou thinkest ‘ this dream will make a tolerable one, it is at thy ser‘ vice, from, Dear SPEC,

Thine, sleeping and waking,

WILL HONEYCOMB.

THE ladies will see, by this letter, what I have often told them, that WILL is one of those old fashioned men of wit and pleasure of the town, that shews his parts by rallery on marriage, and one that has often tried his fortune that way without success. I cannot however dismiss his letter, without observing, that the true story on which it is built does honour to the sex, and that in order to abuse them, the writer is obliged to have recourse to dream and fiction. ○

No. 500. Friday, October 3.

————— *Huc natus adjice septem,
Et totidem juvenes, et mox generosque nurusque:
Quærite nunc habeat quam nostra superbia causam.*
OVID. Met. l. 6. v. 182.

*Seven are my daughters, of a form divine,
With seven fair sons, an indefective line,
Go, fools, consider this, and ask the cause,
From which my pride its strong presumption draws.*

CROXAL.

S I R,

‘ YOU, who are so well acquainted with the story
‘ of Socrates, must have read how, upon his making a discourse concerning love, he pressed his point ‘ with so much success, that all the batchelors in his ‘ audience took a resolution to marry by the first opportunity, and that all the married men immediately ‘ took horse and galloped home to their wives. I am ‘ apt to think your discourses, in which you have ‘ drawn so many agreeable pictures of marriage, have ‘ had a very good effect this way in England. We ‘ are obliged to you at least for having taken off that ‘ senseless ridicule, which for many years the wittlings of the town have turned upon their fathers and ‘ mothers. For my own part, I was born in wedlock,
‘ and I don’t care who knows it; for which reason, among many others, I should look upon myself as a ‘ most insufferable coxcomb, did I endeavour to maintain that cuckoldom was inseparable from marriage, ‘ or to make use of husband and wife as terms of reproach. Nay, Sir, I will go one step further, and declare to you before the whole world, that I am a ‘ married man, and at the same time I have so much ‘ assurance as not to be ashamed of what I have done.
‘ AMONG the several pleasures that accompany this ‘ state of life, and which you have described in your ‘ former papers, there are two you have not taken no‘ tice of, and which are seldom cast into the account, ‘ by those who write on this subject. You must have ‘ observed, in your speculations on human nature, that ‘ nothing is more gratifying to the mind of man than ‘ power or dominion; and this I think myself amply ‘ possessed of, as I am the father of a family. I am ‘ perpetually taken up in giving out orders, in prescri‘ bing duties, in hearing parties, in administering ju‘ stice, and in distributing rewards and punishments.

‘ To speak in the language of the centurion, *I say un‘ to one, go, and he goeth: and to another, come, and ‘ he cometh; and to my servant, do this, and he doth
‘ it*. In short, Sir, I look upon my family as a patri‘ archal sovereignty, in which I am myself both king ‘ and priest. All great governments are nothing else ‘ but clusters of these little private royalties, and ‘ therefore I consider the masters of families as small ‘ deputy governors presiding over the several lit‘ tle parcels and divisions of their fellow-subjects. As ‘ I take great pleasure in the administration of my go‘ vernment in particular, so I look upon myself not ‘ only as a more useful, but as a much greater and ‘ happier man than any batchelor in England, of my ‘ rank and condition.

‘ THERE is another accidental advantage in marri‘ age, which has likewise fallen to my share, I mean ‘ the having a multitude of children. These I cannot ‘ but regard as very great blessings. When I see my ‘ little troop before me, I rejoice in the additions ‘ which I have made to my species, to my country,
‘ and to my religion, in having produced such a num‘ ber of reasonable creatures, citizens, and Christians.
‘ I am pleased to see myself thus perpetuated: and as ‘ there is no production comparable to that of a hu‘ man creature, I am more proud of having been the ‘ occasion of ten such glorious productions, than if I ‘ had built an hundred pyramids at my own expence, ‘ or published as many volumes of the finest wit and ‘ learning. In what a beautiful light has the holy ‘ scripture represented Abdon, one of the judges of ‘ Israel, who had forty sons and thirty grandsons, ‘ that rode on threescore and ten ass-colts, according ‘ to the magnificence of the Eastern countries? How ‘ must the heart of the old man rejoice, when he saw ‘ such a beautiful procession of his own descendants, ‘ such a numerous cavalcade of his own raising? For ‘ my own part, I can sit in my parlour with great ‘ content, when I take a review of half a dozen of my ‘ little boys mounted upon hobby-horses, and as many ‘ little girls tutoring their babies, each of them en‘ deavouring to excel the rest, and to do something ‘ that may gain my favour and approbation. I cannot ‘ question but he who has blessed me with so many ‘ children, will assist me in my endeavours in provid‘ ing for them. There is one thing I am able to give ‘ each of them, which is a virtuous education. I think ‘ it is Sir Francis Bacon’s observation, that in a nume‘ rous family of children, the eldest son is often spoil‘ ed by the prospect of an estate, and the youngest by ‘ being the darling of the parent; but that some one ‘ or other in the middle, who has not perhaps been ‘ regarded, has made his way into the world, and o-‘ vertopped the rest. It is my business to implant in ‘ every one of my children the same seeds of industry, ‘ and the same honest principles. By this means I ‘ think I have a fair chance, that one or other of them ‘ may grow considerable in some or other way of life, ‘ whether it be in the army or in the fleet, in trade,

‘ or in any of the three learned professions; for you ‘ must know, Sir, that from long experience and ob‘ servation, I am persuaded of what seems a paradox ‘ to most of those with whom I converse, namely, That ‘ a man who has many children, and gives them a ‘ good education, is more likely to raise a family, than

‘ he who has but one, notwithstanding he leaves him ‘ his whole estate. For this reason I cannot forbear ‘ amusing myself with finding out a general, an admiral, ‘ or an alderman of London, a divine, a physician ‘ or a lawyer among my little people who are now perhaps ‘ in petticoats ; and when I see the motherly airs ‘ of my little daughters when they are playing with ‘ their puppets, I cannot but flatter myself that their ‘ husbands and children will be happy in the possession ‘ of such wives and mothers.

‘ If you are a father, you will not perhaps think ‘ this letter impertinent: but if you are a single man, ‘ you will not know the meaning of it, and probably ‘ throw it into the fire: whatever you determine of it, ‘ you may assure yourself that it comes from one who is Your most humble servant, and well-wisher,

PHILOGAMUS.

No. 501. Saturday, October 4.

Durum; sed levius fit patientia

Quicquid corrigere est nefas. Hor. Od. 24. l. i. v. 19.

'Tis hard: but patience must endure,

And sooth the woes it cannot cure.

FRANCIS.

AS some of the finest compositions among the ancients are in allegory, I have endeavoured, in several of my papers, to revive that way of writing, and hope I have not been altogether unsuccessful in it; for I find there is always a great demand for those particular papers, and cannot but observe that several authors have endeavoured of late to excel in works of this nature. Among these, I do not know any one who has succeeded better than a very ingenious gentleman to whom I am obliged for the following piece, and who was the author of the vision in the CCCCLXth paper.

[By Dr PARNELL.]

HOW are we tortured with the absence of what we covet to possess, when it appears to be lost to us! What excursions does the soul make in imagination after it! And how does it turn into itself again, more foolishly fond and dejected, at the disappointment! Our grief, instead of having recourse to reason, which might restrain it, searches to find a further nourishment. It calls upon memory to relate the several passages and circumstances of satisfactions which we formerly enjoyed; the pleasures we purchased by those riches that are taken from us; or the power and splendor of our departed honours; or the voice, the words, the looks, the temper, and affections of our friends that are deceased. It needs must happen from hence that the passion should often swell to such a size as to burst the heart which contains it, if time did not make these circumstances less strong and lively, so that reason should become a more equal match for the passion, or if another desire which becomes more present did not overpower them with a livelier representation. These are thoughts which I had, when I fell into a kind of vision upon this subject, and may therefore stand for a proper introduction to a relation of it.

I FOUND myself upon a naked shore, with company, whose afflicted countenances witnessed their conditions. Before us flowed a water deep, silent, and called the river of tears, which issuing from two fountains on an upper ground, encompassed an island that lay before us. The boat which plied in it was old and shattered, having been sometimes overset by the impatience and haste of single passengers to arrive at the other side. This immediately was brought to us by Misfortune who steers it, and we were all preparing to take our places, when there appeared a woman of a mild and composed behaviour, who began to deter us from it, by representing the dangers which would attend our voyage. Hereupon some who knew her for Patience, and some of those too who till then cried the loudest, were persuaded by her, and returned back. The rest of us went in, and she (whose good nature would not suffer her to forsake persons in trouble) desired leave to accompany us, that she might at least administer some small comfort or advice while we sailed. We were no sooner embarked but the boat was pushed off, the sheet was spread; and being filled with Sighs, which are the winds of that country, we made a passage to the farther bank, through several difficulties of which the most of us seemed utterly regardless.

WHEN we landed, we perceived the island to be strangely overcast with fogs, which no brightness could pierce, so that a kind of gloomy horror sat always brooding over it. This had something in it very shocking to easy tempers, insomuch that some others, whom Patience had by this time gained over, left us here, and privily conveyed themselves round the verge of the island to find a ford by which she told them they might escape.

FOR my part, I still went along with those who were for piercing into the centre of the place; and joining ourselves to others whom we found upon the same journey, we marched solemnly, as at a funeral, through bordering hedges of rosemary, and through a grove of yew-trees, which love to overshadow tombs, and flourish in church-yards. Here we heard on every side the wailings and complaints of several of the inhabitants, who had cast themselves disconsolately at the feet of trees; and as we chanced to approach any of these we might perceive them wringing their hands, beating their breasts, tearing their hair, or after some other manner visibly agitated with vexation. Our sorrows were heightened by the influence of what we heard and saw, and one of our number was wrought up to such a pitch of wildness, as to talk of hanging himself upon a bough which shot temptingly across the path we travelled in; but he was restrained from it by the kind endeavours of our above mentioned companion.

WE had now gotten into the most dusky silent part of the island, and by the redoubled sounds of sighs, which made a doleful whistling in the branches, the thickness of air which occasioned faintish respiration, and the violent throbbings of heart which more and more affected us, we found that we approached the Grotto of Grief. It was a wide, hollow, and melancholy cave, sunk deep in a dale and watered by rivulets that had a colour between red and black. These crept slow and half congealed amongst its windings, and mixed their heavy murmurs with the echo of groans, that rolled through all the passages. In the most retired part of it sat the doleful being herself; the path to her was strowed with goads, stings and thorns; and her throne on which she sat was broken into a rock, with ragged pieces pointing upwards for her to lean upon. A heavy mist hung above her; her head oppressed with it reclined upon her arm: thus did she reign over her disconsolate subjects, full of herself to stupidity, in eternal pensiveness and the profoundest silence. On one side of her stood Dejection just dropping into a swoon, and Paleness wasting to a skeleton, on the other side were Care inwardly tormented with imaginations, and Anguish, suffering outward Troubles to suck the blood from her heart in the shape of Vultures. The whole vault had a genuine dismalness in it, which a few scattered lamps, whose bluish flames arose and sunk in their urns, discovered to our eyes with increase. Some of us fell down, overcome and spent with what they suffered in the way, and were given over to those tormentors that stood on either hand of the presence; others, galled and mortified with pain, recovered the entrance, where Patience, whom we had left behind, was still waiting to receive us.

WITH her (whose company was now become more grateful to us by the want we had found of her) we winded round the grotto, and ascended at the back of it out of the mournful dale in whose bottom it lay. On this eminence we halted, by her advice, to pant for breath; and lifting our eyes, which 'till then were fixed downwards, felt a fullen sort of satisfaction, in observing thro' the shades what numbers had entered the island. This satisfaction, which appears to have ill-nature in it, was excusable, because it happened at a time when we were too much taken up with our own concern, to have respect to that of others; and therefore we did not consider them as suffering, but ourselves as not suffering in the most forlorn estate. It had also the ground-work of humanity and compassion in it, though the mind was then too dark and too deeply engaged to perceive it; but, as we proceeded onwards, it began to discover itself, and from observing that others were unhappy, we came to question one another, when it was that we met, and what were the sad occasions that brought us together. Then we heard our stories, we compared them, we mutually gave and received pity, and so by degrees became tolerable company.

A CONSIDERABLE part of the troublesome road was thus deceived; at length the openings among the trees grew larger, the air seemed thinner, it lay with less oppression upon us, and we could now and then discern tracks in it of a lighter greyness, like the breaking of day, short in duration, much enlivening, and called in that country gleams of amusement. Within a short while these gleams began to appear more frequent, and then brighter and of a longer continuance; the sighs that hitherto filled the air with so much dolefulness, altered to the sound of common breezes, and in general the horrors of the island were abated.

WHEN we had arrived at last at the ford by which we were to pass out, we met with those fashionable mourners, who had been ferry'd over along with us, and who being unwilling to go as far as we, had coasted by the shore to find the place, where they waited our coming; that by shewing themselves to the world only at the time when we did, they might seem also to have been among the troubles of the grotto. Here the waters that rolled on the other side so deep and silent, were much dried up, and it was an easier matter for us to wade over.

THE river being crossed, we were received upon the further bank by our friends and acquaintance, whom Comfort had brought out to congratulate our appearance in the world again. Some of these blamed us for staying so long away from them, others advised us against all temptations of going back again; every one was cautious not to renew our trouble, by asking any particulars of the journey; and all concluded, that in a case of so much melancholy and affliction, we could not have made choice of a fitter companion than Patience. Here Patience, appearing serene at her praises, delivered us over to Comfort. Comfort smiled at his receiving the charge; immediately the sky purpled on that side to which he turned, and double day at once broke in upon me.

No 502. Monday, October 6.

Melius, pejus, profit, obfit, nil vident nisi quod lubent.

TER. Heaut. act. 4. sc. 1.

Better or worse, profitable or disadvantageous, they see nothing but what they list.

WHEN men read, they taste the matter with which they are entertained, according as their own respective studies and inclinations have prepared them, and make their reflexions accordingly. Some perusing Roman writers, would find in them, whatever the subject of the discourses were, parts which implied the grandeur of that people in their welfare or their politics. As for my part who am a mere SPECTATOR, I drew this morning conclusions of their eminence in what I think great, to wit, in having worthy sentiments, from the reading a comedy of Terence. The play was the Self-tormentor. It is from the beginning to the end a perfect picture of human life, but I did not observe in the whole one passage that could raise a laugh. How well disposed must that people be, who could be entertained with satisfaction by so sober and polite mirth? In the first scene of the comedy, when one of the old men accuses the other of impertinence for interposing in his affairs, he answers, I am a man, and cannot help feeling any sorrow that can arrive at man. It is said, this sentence was received with an universal applause. There can not be a greater argument of the general good understanding of a people, than a sudden consent to give their approbation of a sentiment which has no emotion in it. If it were spoken with never so great skill in the actor, the manner of uttering that sentence could have nothing in it which could strike any but people of the greatest humanity, nay, people elegant and skilful in observations upon it. It is possible he might have laid his hand on his breast, and, with a winning insinuation in his countenance, expressed to his neighbour that he was a man who made his case his own; yet I'll engage a player in Covent-garden might hit such an attitude a thousand times before he would have been regarded. I have heard that a minister of state in the reign of queen Elizabeth had all manner of books and ballads brought to him, of what kind soever, and took great notice how much they took with the people; upon which he would, and certainly might, very well judge of their present dispositions, and the most proper way of applying them according to his own purposes. What passes on the stage, and the reception it meets with from the audience, is a very useful instruction of this kind. According to what you may observe there on our stage, you see them often moved so directly against all common sense and humanity, that you would be apt to pronounce us a nation of savages. It cannot be called a mistake of what is pleasant, but the very contrary to it is what most assuredly takes with them. The other night an old woman, carried off with a pain in her side, with all the distortions and anguish of countenance which is natural to one in that condition, was laughed and clapped off the stage. Terence's comedy, which I am speaking of, is indeed written as if he hoped to please none but such as had as good a taste as himself. I could not but reflect upon the natural description of the innocent young woman made by the servant to his master. "When " I came to the house, (said he) an old woman open" ed the door, and I followed her in, because I could

" by entering upon them unawares better observe what " was your mistress's ordinary manner of spending her " time, the only way of judging any one's inclinati-
" ons and genius. I found her at her needle in a sort " of second mourning, which she wore for an aunt she " had lately lost. She had nothing on but what shew-
" ed she dressed only for herself. Her hair hung ne" gligently about her shoulders. She had none of the " arts with which others use to set themselves off, but " had that negligence of person which is remarkable
" in those who are careful of their minds.—Then she " had a maid who was at work near her, that was a " perfect flattern, because her mistress was careless:
" which I take to be another argument of your secu" rity in her; for the go-betweens of women of in" trigue are rewarded too well to be dirty. When you " were named, and I told her you desired to see her,
" she threw down her work for joy, covered her face,
" and decently hid her tears."——He must be a very good actor, and draw attention rather from his own character than the words of the author, that could gain it among us for this speech, though so full of nature and good sense.

THE intolerable folly and confidence of players putting in words of their own, does in a great measure feed the absurd taste of the audience. But however that is, it is ordinary for a cluster of coxcombs to take up the house to themselves, and equally insult both the actors and the company. These savages, who want all manner of regard and deference to the rest of mankind, come only to shew themselves to us, without any other purpose than to let us know they despise us.

THE gross of an audience is composed of two sorts of people, those who know no pleasure but of the body, and those who improve or command corporeal pleasures by the addition of fine sentiments of the mind. At present the intelligent part of the company are wholly subdued by the insurrections of those who know no satisfactions but what they have in common with all other animals.

THIS is the reason, that when a scene tending to procreation is acted, you see the whole pit in such a chuckle, and old lechers, with mouths open, stare at the loose gesticulations on the stage with shameful earnestness; when the justest pictures of human life in its calm dignity, and the properest sentiments for the conduct of it, pass by like mere narration, as conducing only to somewhat much better which is to come after. I have seen the whole house at some times in so proper a disposition, that indeed I have trembled for the boxes, and feared the entertainment would end in the representation of the rape of the Sabines.

I would not be understood in this talk to argue, that nothing is tolerable on the stage but what has an immediate tendency to the promotion of virtue. On the contrary, I can allow, provided there is nothing against the interests of virtue, and is not offensive to good manners, that things of an indifferent nature may be represented. For this reason I have no exceptions to the well drawn rusticities in the Country wake; and there is something so miraculously pleasant in Dogget's acting the awkward triumph and comic sorrow of Hob in different circumstances, that I shall not be able to stay away whenever it is acted. All that vexes me is, that the gallantry of taking the cudgels for Gloucestershire, with the pride of heart in tucking himself up, and taking aim at his adversary, as well as the other's protestation, in the humanity of low romance, that he could not promise the squire to break Hob's head, but he would, if he could, do it in love; then flourish and begin: I say, what vexes me is, that such excellent touches as these, as well as the squire's being out of all patience at Hob's success, and venturing himself in the crowd, are circumstances hardly taken notice of, and the height of the jest is only in the very point that heads are broken. I am confident, was there a scene written, wherein Penkethman should break his leg by wrestling with Bullock, and Dicky come in to set it, without one word said but what should be according to the exact rules of surgery in making the extension, and binding up of the leg, the whole house should be in a roar of applause at the dissembled anguish of the patient, the help given by him who threw him down, and the handy address and arch looks of the surgeon. To enumerate the entrance of ghosts, the embattling of armies, the noise of heroes in love, with a thousand other enormities, would be to transgress the bounds of this paper, for which reason it is possible they may have hereafter distinct discourses; not forgetting any of the audience who shall set up for actors, and interrupt the play on the stage: and players who shall prefer the applause of fools to that of the reasonable part of the company. T

No. 503. Tuesday, October 7.

Deleo omnes dehinc ex animo mulieres.

TER. Eun. act. 2. sc. 3.

From henceforward I blot out of my thoughts all memory of womankind.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ YOU have often mentioned with great vehemence ‘ and indignation the misbehaviour of people at ‘ church; but I am at present to talk to you on that ‘ subject, and complain to you of one, whom at the ‘ same time I know not what to accuse of, except it be ‘ looking too well there, and diverting the eyes of the ‘ congregation to that one object. However, I have ‘ this to say, that she might have staid at her own pa‘ rish, and not come to perplex those who are other‘ wise intent upon their duty.

‘ LAST Sunday was seven night I went into a church ‘ not far from London-bridge; but I wish I had been ‘ contented to go to my own parish, I am sure it had ‘ been better for me; I say, I went to church thither, ‘ and got into a pew very near the pulpit. I had ‘ hardly been accommodated with a seat, before there ‘ entered into the isle a young lady in the very bloom ‘ of youth and beauty, and dressed in the most elegant ‘ manner imaginable. Her form was such, that it ‘ engaged the eyes of the whole congregation in an ‘ instant, and mine among the rest. Though we were ‘ all thus fixed upon her, she was not in the least out ‘ of countenance, or under the least disorder, though ‘ unattended by any one, and not seeming to know ‘ particularly where to place herself. However, she ‘ had not in the least a confident aspect, but moved on ‘ with the most graceful modesty, every one making ‘ way till she came to a seat just over-against that in ‘ which I was placed. The deputy of the ward sat ‘ in that pew, and she stood opposite to him, and at a ‘ glance into the seat, though she did not appear the ‘ least acquainted with the gentleman, was let in, with ‘ a confusion that spoke much admiration at the no‘ velty of the thing. The service immediately began,

‘ and she composed herself for it with an air of so much ‘ goodness and sweetness, that the confession which she ‘ uttered so as to be heard where I sat, appeared an ‘ act of humiliation more than she had occasion for.
‘ The truth is, her beauty had something so innocent, ‘ and yet so sublime, that we all gazed upon her like ‘ a phantom. None of the pictures which we behold ‘ of the best Italian painters, have any thing like the ‘ spirit which appeared in her countenance, at the dif‘ ferent sentiments expressed in the several parts of di‘ vine service: that gratitude and joy at a thanksgiv‘ ing, that lowliness and sorrow at the prayers for the ‘ sick and distressed, that triumph at the passages ‘ which gave instances of the divine mercy, which ap‘ peared respectively in her aspect, will be in my me‘ mory to my last hour. I protest to you, Sir, she ‘ suspended the devotion of every one around her;
‘ and the ease she did every thing with, soon dispersed ‘ the churlish dislike and hesitation in approving what ‘ is excellent, too frequent among us, to a general at‘ tention and entertainment in observing her behavi‘ our. All the while that we were gazing at her, she ‘ took notice of no object about her, but had an art ‘ of seeming awkwardly attentive, whatever else her ‘ eyes were accidentally thrown upon. One thing in‘ deed was particular, she stood the whole service, and ‘ never kneeled or sat; I do not question but that was ‘ to shew herself with the greater advantage, and set ‘ forth to better grace her hands and arms lifted up ‘ with the most ardent devotion, and her bosom, the ‘ fairest that was ever seen, bare to observation; while ‘ she, you must think, knew nothing of the concern ‘ she gave others, any other than as an example of de‘ votion, that threw herself out, without regard to ‘ dress or garment, all contrition, and loose of all world‘ ly regards, in ecstasy of devotion. Well, now the ‘ organ was to play a voluntary, and she was so skil‘ ful in music, and so touched with it, that she kept ‘ time, not only with some motion of her head, but al‘ so with a different air in her countenance. When ‘ the music was strong and bold, she looked exalted, ‘ but serious; when lively and airy, she was smiling ‘ and gracious: when the notes were more soft and ‘ languishing, she was kind and full of pity. When ‘ she had now made it visible to the whole congrega‘ tion, by her motion and ear, that she could dance, ‘ and she wanted now only to inform us, that she could ‘ sing too, when the psalm was given out, her voice ‘ was distinguished above all the rest, or rather people ‘ did not exert their own in order to hear her. Ne‘ ver was any heard so sweet and so strong. The or‘ ganist observed it, and he thought fit to play to her ‘ only, and she swelled every note, when she found she ‘ had thrown us all out, and had the last verse to her‘ self, in such a manner as the whole congregation ‘ was intent upon her, in the same manner as we see ‘ in the cathedrals they are on the person who sings ‘ alone the anthem. Well, it came at last to the ser‘ mon, and our young lady would not lose her part in ‘ that neither; for she fixed her eye upon the preach‘ er, and as he said any thing she approved, with one ‘ of Charles Mather’s fine tables she set down the sen‘ tence, at once shewing her fine hand, the gold pen, ‘ her readiness in writing, and her judgment in chus‘ ing what to write. To sum up what I intend by ‘ this long and particular account, I mean to appeal ‘ to you, whether it is reasonable that such a creature ‘ as this shall come from a janty part of the town, and ‘ give herself such violent airs, to the disturbance of ‘ an innocent and inoffensive congregation, with her ‘ sublimities. The fact, I assure you, was as I have ‘ related; but I had like to have forgot another very ‘ considerable particular. As soon as church was done, ‘ she immediately stepped out of her pew, and fell into ‘ the finest pitty-pat air, forsooth, wonderfully out of countenance, tossing her head up and down, as she swam along the body of the church. I, with several others of the inhabitants, followed her out, and saw her hold up her fan to an hackney-coach at a distance, who immediately came up to her, and she whipped into it with great nimbleness, pulled the door with a bowing mien, as if she had been used to a better glass. She said aloud, You know where to go, and drove off. By this time the best of the congregation was at the church-door, and I could hear some say, A very fine lady; others, I'll warrant ye, she's no better than she should be; and one very wise old lady said, She ought to have been taken up. Mr SPECTATOR, I think this matter lies wholly before you; for the offence does not come under any law, though it is apparent this creature came among us only to give herself airs, and enjoy her full swing in being admired. I desire you would print this, that she may be confined to her own parish; for I can assure you there is no attending any thing else in a place where she is a novelty. She has been talked of among us ever since under the name of the Phantom. But I would advise her to come no more; for there is so strong a party made by the women against her, that she must expect they will not be excelled a second time in so outrageous a manner, without doing her some insult. Young women, who assume after this rate, and affect exposing themselves to view in congregations at t'other end of the town, are not so mischievous, because they are rivalled by more of the same ambition, who will not let the rest of the company be particular: but in the name of the whole congregation where I was, I desire you to keep these agreeable disturbances out of the city, where sobriety of manners is still preserved, and all glaring and ostentatious behaviour, even in things laudable, discountenanced. I wish you may never see the Phantom, and am, S I R, Your most humble servant,

T

RALPH WONDER.

No. 504.

Wednesday, October 8.

Lepus tute es, et pulpamentum quæris.

TER. Eun. act. 3. sc. 1.

You are a hare yourself, and want dainties, forsooth.

IT is a great convenience to those who want wit to furnish out a conversation, that there is something or other in all companies where it is wanted, substituted in its stead, which, according to their taste, does the business as well. Of this nature is the agreeable pastime in country-halls of cross purposes, questions and commands, and the like. A little superior to these are those who can play at crambo, or cap verses. Then above them are such as can make verses, that is rhyme; and among those who have the Latin tongue, such as use to make what they call golden verses. Commend me also to those who have not brains enough for any of these exercises, and yet do not give up their pretensions to mirth. These can slap you on the back unawares, laugh loud, ask you how you do with a twang on your shoulders, say you are dull to-day, and laugh a voluntary to put you in humour; not to mention the laborious way among the minor poets, of making things come into such and such a shape, as that of an egg, an hand, an ax, or any thing that nobody had ever thought on before for that purpose, or which would have cost a great deal of pains to accomplish it if they did. But all these methods, though they are mechanical, and may be arrived at with the smallest capacity, do not serve an honest gentleman who wants wit for his ordinary occasions; therefore it is absolutely necessary that the poor in imagination should have something which may be serviceable to them at all hours upon all common occurrences. That which we call punning is therefore greatly affected by men of small intellects. These men need not be concerned with you for the whole sentence; but if they can say a quaint thing, or bring in a word which sounds like any one word you have spoken to them, they can turn the discourse, or distract you, so that you cannot go on, and by consequence, if they cannot be as witty as you are, they can hinder your being any wittier than they are. Thus if you talk of a candle, he can deal with you; and if you ask to help you to some bread, a punster should think himself very ill-bred if he did not; and if he is not as well-bred as yourself, he hopes for grains of allowance. If you do not understand that last fancy, you must recollect that bread is made of grain; and so they go on for ever, without possibility of being exhausted.

THERE are another kind of people of small faculties, who supply want of wit with want of breeding; and because women are both by nature and education more offended at any thing which is immodest than we men are, these are ever harping upon things they ought not to allude to, and deal mightily in double meanings. Every one's own observation will suggest instances enough of this kind, without my mentioning any; for your double meaners are dispersed up and down through all parts of town or city where there are any to offend, in order to set off themselves. These men are mighty loud laughers, and held very pretty gentlemen with the filtier and unbred part of woman-kind. But above all already mentioned, or any who ever were, or ever can be in the world, the happiest and surest to be pleasant, are a sort of people whom we have not indeed lately heard much of, and those are your Biters.

A Biter is one who tells you a thing, you have no reason to disbelieve in itself, and perhaps has given you, before he bit you, no reason to disbelieve it for his saying it; and if you give him credit, laughs in your face, and triumphs that he has deceived you. In a word, a Biter is one who thinks you a fool, because you do not think him a knave. This description of him one may insist upon to be a just one; for what else but a degree of knavery is it, to depend upon deceit for what you gain of another, be it in point of wit, or interest, or any thing else?

THIS way of wit is called Biting, by a metaphor taken from beasts of prey, which devour harmless and unarmed animals, and look upon them as their food where-ever they meet them. The sharpers about town very ingeniously understood themselves to be to the undefigning part of mankind what foxes are to lambs, and therefore used the word Biting to express any exploit wherein they had over-reached any innocent and inadvertent man of his purse. These rascals of late years have been the gallants of the town, and carried it with a fashionable haughty air to the discouragement of modesty, and all honest arts. Shallow fops, who are governed by the eye, and admire every thing that struts in vogue, took up from the sharpers the phrase of Biting, and used it upon all occasions, either to disown any nonsensical stuff they should talk themselves, or evade the force of what was reasonably said by others. Thus, when one of these cunning creatures was entered into a debate with you, whether it was practicable in the present state of affairs to accomplish such a proposition, and you thought he had let fall what destroyed his side of the question, as soon as you looked with an earnestness ready to lay hold of it, he immediately cried, Bite, and you were immediately to acknowledge all that part was in jest. They carry this to all the extravagance imaginable, and if one of these witlings knows any particulars which may give authority to what he says, he is still the more ingenious if he imposes upon your credulity. I remember a remarkable instance of this kind. There came up a shrewd young fellow to a plain young man, his countryman, and taking him aside with a grave concerned countenance, goes on at this rate: I see you here, and have you heard nothing out of Yorkshire?—You look so surpris'd, you could not have heard of it—and yet the particulars are such that it cannot be false: I am sorry I am got into it so far that I now must tell you; but I know not but it may be for your service to know——on Tuesday last, just after dinner——you know his manner is to smoke, opening his box, your father fell down dead of an apoplexy. The youth shewed the filial sorrow which he ought—Upon which the witty man cried, Bite, there was nothing in all this.

To put an end to this silly, pernicious, frivolous way at once, I will give the reader one late instance of a bite which no biter for the future will ever be able to equal, though I heartily wish him the same occasion. It is a superstition with some surgeons who beg the bodies of condemned malefactors, to go to the goal, and bargain for the carcase with the criminal himself. A good honest fellow did so last sessions, and was admitted to the condemned men on the morning wherein they died. The surgeon communicated his business, and fell into discourse with a little fellow, who refused twelve shillings, and insisted upon fifteen for his body. The fellow, who killed the officer of Newgate, very forwardly, and like a man who was willing to deal, told him, Look you, Mr Surgeon, that little dry fellow, who has been half starved all his life, and is now half dead with fear, cannot answer your purpose. I have ever lived highly and freely, my veins are full, I have not pined in imprisonment; you see my crest swells to your knife, and after Jack-Catch has done, upon my honour you'll find me as found as e'er a bullock in any of the markets. Come, for twenty shillings I am your man——Says the surgeon, done, there's a guinea—This witty rogue took the money, and as soon as he had it in his fist, cries, Bite, I am to be hang'd in chains.

T

No. 505. Thursday, October 9.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

*Non habeo denique nauci Marsum augurem,
 Non vicanos aruspices, non de circo astrologos,
 Non Isiacos conjectores, non interpretes somnium:
 Non enim sunt ii, aut scientia, aut arte divini,
 Sed superstitiosi vates, impudentesque harioli,
 Aut inertes, aut insani, aut quibus egestus imperat:
 Qui sui quæstus causa fictas suscitant sententias,
 Qui sibi semitam non sapiunt, alteri monstrant viam, Quibus divitias pollicentur, ab iis drachmam petunt:
 De divitiis deducant drachmam, reddant cætera.*

ENNIUS.

*Augurs, and soothsayers, astrologers,
 Diviners, and interpreters of dreams,
 I ne'er consult, and heartily despise:
 Vain their pretence to more than human skill:
 For gain imaginary schemes they draw;
 Wand'ers themselves, they guide another's steps:
 And for poor sixpence promise countless wealth:
 Let them, if they expect to be believ'd,
 Deduct the sixpence, and bestow the rest.*

THOSE who have maintained that men would be more miserable than beasts, were their hopes confined to this life only, among other considerations take notice, that the latter are only afflicted with the anguish of the present evil, whereas the former are very often pained by the reflexion on what is passed, and the fear of what is to come. This fear of any future difficulties or misfortunes is so natural to the mind, that were a man's sorrows and disquietudes summed up at the end of his life, it would generally be found that he had suffered more from the apprehension of such evils as never happened to him, than from those evils which had really befallen him. To this we may add, that among those evils which befall us, there are many that have been more painful to us in the prospect than by their actual pressure.

THIS natural impatience to look into futurity, and to know what accidents may happen to us hereafter, has given birth to many ridiculous arts and inventions. Some found the prescience on the lines of a man's hand, others on the features of his face; some on the signatures which nature has impressed on his body, and others on his own hand writing; some read men's fortunes in the stars, as others have searched after them in the entrails of beasts, or the flights of birds. Men of the best sense have been touched more or less with these groundless horrors and presages of futurity, upon surveying the most indifferent works of nature. Can any thing be more surprising than to consider Cicero, who made the greatest figure at the bar, and in the senate of the Roman commonwealth, and, at the same time outshined all the philosophers of antiquity in his library and in his retirements, as busying himself in the college of augurs, and observing with a religious attention, after what manner the chickens pecked the several grains of corn which were thrown to them?

NOTWITHSTANDING these follies are pretty well worn out of the minds of the wise and learned in the present age, multitudes of weak and ignorant persons are still slaves to them. There are numberless arts of prediction among the vulgar, which are too trifling to enumerate; and infinite observations of days, numbers, voices, and figures, which are regarded by them as portents and prodigies. In short, every thing prophesies to the superstitious man; there is scarce a straw or a rusty piece of iron that lies in his way by accident.

It is not to be conceived how many wizards, gipsies, and cunning men are dispersed through all the countries and market-towns of Great Britain, not to mention the fortune-tellers and astrologers, who live very comfortably upon the curiosity of several well-disposed persons in the cities of London and Westminster.

AMONG the many pretended arts of divination, there is none which so universally amuses as that by dreams.

I have indeed observed in a late speculation, that there have been sometimes, upon very extraordinary occasions, supernatural revelations made to certain persons by this means; but as it is the chief business of this paper to root out popular errors, I must endeavour to expose the folly and superstition of those persons, who, in the common and ordinary course of life, lay any stress upon things of so uncertain, shadowy, and chimerical a nature. This I cannot do more effectually than by the following letter, which is dated from a quarter of the town that has always been the habitation of some prophetic Philomath: it having been usual time out of mind, for all such people as have lost their wits, to resort to that place, either for their cure or for their instruction.

Mr SPECTATOR,

Moorfields, Oct. 4. 1712.

‘ HAVING long considered whether there be any ‘ trade wanting in this great city, after having ‘ surveyed very attentively all kinds of ranks and pro‘ fessions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an ‘ Oneirocritick, or, in plain English, an interpreter of ‘ dreams. For want of so useful a person, there are ‘ several good people who are very much puzzled in ‘ this particular, and dream a whole year together ‘ without being ever the wiser for it. I hope I am ‘ pretty well qualified for this office, having studied ‘ by candle light all the rules of art which have been ‘ laid down upon this subject. My grand uncle by my ‘ wife’s side was a Scotch highlander, and second-sight‘ ed. I have four fingers and two thumbs upon one ‘ hand, and was born on the longest night of the year.
‘ My Christian and Surname begin and end with the ‘ same letter, I am lodged in Moorfields, in a house that ‘ for these fifty years has been always tenanted by a ‘ conjurer.

‘ If you had been in company, so much as myself,
‘ with ordinary women of the town, you must know,

‘ that there are many of them who every day of their ‘ lives, upon seeing or hearing of any thing that is un‘ expected, cry, My dream is out : and cannot go to sleep ‘ in quiet the next night, till something or other has ‘ happened which has expounded the visions of the ‘ preceeding one. There are others who are in very ‘ great pain for not being able to recover the circum‘ stances of a dream, that made strong impressions upon ‘ them while it lasted. In short, Sir, there are many ‘ whose waking thoughts are wholly employed on ‘ their sleeping ones. For the benefit therefore of this ‘ curious and inquisitive part of my fellow-subjects, ‘ I shall in the first place tell those persons what they ‘ dream’d of, who fancy they never dream at all. In ‘ the next place I shall make out any dream, upon hear‘ ing a single circumstance of it. And in the last place, ‘ shall expound to them the good or bad fortune which ‘ such dreams portend. If they do not presage good ‘ luck, I shall desire nothing for my pains ; not questi‘ oning at the same time that those who consult me ‘ will be so reasonable as to afford me a moderate share ‘ out of any considerable estate, profit or emolument ‘ which I shall discover to them. I interpret to the ‘ poor for nothing, on condition that their names may ‘ be inserted in public advertisements, to attest the ‘ truth of such my interpretations. As for people of ‘ quality or others who are indisposed, and do not care ‘ to come in person, I can interpret their dreams by ‘ seeing their water. I set aside one day in the week ‘ for lovers ; and interpret by the great for any gentle‘ woman who is turned of sixty, after the rate of half-‘ a crown per week, with the usual allowances for good ‘ luck. I have several rooms and apartments fitted ‘ up, at reasonable rates, for such as have not conve‘ niences for dreaming at their own houses.

TITUS TROPHONIUS.

N. B. I am not dumb.

O

No. 506. Friday, October 10.

[By Mr BUDGEL.]

*Candida perpetuo reside, concordia, lecto, Tamque pari semper sit Venus æqua jugo.
 Diligat illa senem quondam: sed et ipsa marito.
 Tunc quoque cum fuerit, non videatur anus.*

MART. epig. 13. l. 4. v. 7.

*Perpetual harmony their bed attend,
 And Venus still the well-match'd pair befriend,
 May she, when time has sunk him into years,
 Love her old man, and cherish his white hairs;
 Nor he perceive her charms thro' age decay,
 But think each happy sun his bridal day.*

THE following essay is written by the gentleman to whom the world is obliged for those several excellent discourses which have been marked with the letter X.

I Have somewhere met with a fable that made wealth the father of love. It is certain that a mind ought, at least, to be free from the apprehensions of want and poverty, before it can fully attend to all the softnesses and endearments of this passion. Notwithstanding we see multitudes of married people, who are utter strangers to this delightful passion, amidst all the affluence of the most plentiful fortunes.

It is not sufficient to make a marriage happy, that the humours of two people should be alike: I could instance an hundred pair, who have not the least sentiment of love remaining for one another, yet are so like in their humours, that if they were not already married, the whole world would design them for man and wife.

THE spirit of love has something so extreamly fine in it, that it is very often disturbed and lost, by some little accidents, which the careless and unpolite never attain to, till it is gone past recovery.

NOTHING has more contributed to banish it from a married state, than too great a familiarity, and laying aside the common rules of decency. Though I could give instances of this in several particulars, I shall only mention that of dress. The beaux and belles about town, who dress purely to catch one another, think there is no farther occasion for the bait, when their first design has succeeded. But besides the too common fault in point of neatness, there are several others which I do not remember to have seen touched upon, but in one of our modern comedies, where a French woman offering to undress and dress herself before the lover of the play, and assuring her mistress that it was very usual in France, the lady tells her that's a secret in dress she never knew before, and that she was disappointed an English woman as to resolve never to learn to dress even before her husband.

THERE is something so gross in the carriage of some wives, that they lose their husbands hearts for faults, which, if a man has either good-nature or good-breeding, he knows not how to tell them of. I am afraid, indeed, the ladies are generally most faulty in this particular; who, at their first giving into love, find the way so smooth and pleasant, that they fancy it is scarce possible to be tired in it.

THERE is so much nicety and discretion required to keep love alive after marriage, and make conversation still new and agreeable after twenty or thirty years, that I know nothing which seems readily to promise it, but an earnest endeavour to please on both sides, and superior good sense on the part of the man.

By a man of sense, I mean one acquainted with business and letters.

A WOMAN very much settles her esteem for a man, according to the figure he makes in the world, and the character he bears among his own sex. As learning is the chief advantage we have over them, it is, methinks, as scandalous and inexcusable for a man of fortune to be illiterate, as for a woman not to know how to behave herself on the most ordinary occasions.

It is this which sets the two sexes at the greatest distance; a woman is vexed and surpris'd to find nothing more in the conversation of a man, than in the common tattle of her own sex.

SOME small engagement at least in business, not only sets a man's talents in the fairest light, and allots him a part to act, in which a wife cannot well intermeddle; but gives frequent occasions for those little absences, which, whatever seeming uneasiness they may give, are some of the best preservatives of love and desire.

THE fair sex are so conscious to themselves, that they have nothing in them which can deserve entirely to engross the whole man, that they heartily despise one, who, to use their own expression, is always hanging at their apron strings.

LÆTITIA is pretty, modest, tender, and has sense enough; she married Erastus, who is in a post of some business, and has a general taste in most parts of polite learning. Lætitia, wherever she visits, has the pleasure to hear of something which was handsomely said or done by Erastus.. Erastus, since his marriage, is more gay in his dress than ever, and in all companies is as complaisant to Lætitia as to any other lady. I have seen him give her her fan, when it has dropped, with all the gallantry of a lover. When they take the air together, Erastus is continually improving her thoughts, and, with a turn of wit and spirit which is peculiar to him, giving her an insight into things she had no notion of before. Lætitia is transported at having a new world thus opened to her, and hangs upon the man that gives her such agreeable informations. Erastus has carried this point still further, as he makes her daily not only more fond of him, but infinitely more satisfied with herself. Erastus finds a justness or beauty in whatever she says or observes, that Lætitia herself was not aware of; and, by his assistance, she has discovered an hundred good qualities and accomplishments in herself, which she never before once dreamed of. Erastus, with the most artful complaisance in the world, by several remote hints, finds the means to make her say or propose almost whatever he has a mind to, which he always receives as her own discovery, and gives her all the reputation of it.

ERASTUS has a perfect taste in painting, and carried Lætitia with him the other day to see a collection of pictures. I sometimes visit this happy couple. As we were last week walking in the long gallery before dinner, 'I have lately laid out some money on paintings, says Erastus; I bought that Venus and Adonis purely upon Lætitia's judgment; it cost me three-score guineas, and I was this morning offered an hundred for it.' I turned towards Lætitia, and saw her cheeks glow with pleasure, while at the same time she cast a look upon Erastus, the most tender and affectionate I ever beheld.

FLAVILLA married Tom Tawdry; she was taken with his laced coat and rich sword-knot: she has the mortification to see Tom despised by all the worthy part of his own sex. Tom has nothing to do after dinner but to determine whether he will pare his nails at St James's, White's, or his own house. He has said nothing to Flavilla since they were married, which she might not have heard as well from her own woman. He however takes great care to keep up the saucy ill-natured authority of a husband. Whatever Flavilla happens to assert, Tom immediately contradicts with an oath by way of preface, and, My dear, I must tell you, you talk most confoundedly silly. Flavilla had a heart naturally as well disposed for all the tenderness of love as that of Lætitia; but as love seldom continues long after esteem, it is difficult to determine, at present, whether the unhappy Flavilla hates or despises the person most, whom she is obliged to lead her whole life with. X

No. 507. Saturday, October 11.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Defendit numerus, junctæque umbone phalanges.

JUV. Sat. 2. v. 46.

Preserv'd from shame by numbers on our side.

THERE is something very sublime, though very fanciful, in Plato's description of the supreme being, that truth is his body, and light his shadow. According to this definition, there is nothing so contradictory to his nature, as error and falsehood. The Platonists have so just a notion of the Almighty's aversion to every thing which is false and erroneous, that they looked upon truth as no less necessary than virtue, to qualify a human soul for the enjoyment of a separate state. For this reason as they recommended moral duties to qualify and season the will for a future life, so they prescribed several contemplations and sciences to rectify the understanding. Thus Plato has called mathematical demonstrations the cathartics or purgatives of the soul, as being the most proper means to cleanse it from error, and to give it a relish of truth: which is the natural food and nourishment of the understanding, as virtue is the perfection and happiness of the will.

THERE are many authors who have shewn wherein the malignity of a lie consists, and set forth, in proper colours, the heinousness of the offence. I shall here consider one particular kind of this crime, which has not been so much spoken to; I mean that abominable practice of party-lying. This vice is so very predominant among us at present, that a man is thought of no principles who does not propagate a certain system of lies. The coffee-houses are supported by them, the press is choked with them, eminent authors live upon them. Our bottle conversation is so infected with them that a party-lie is grown as fashionable an entertainment, as a lively catch or a merry story: the truth of it is, half the great talkers in the nation would be struck dumb, were this fountain of discourse dried up. There is however one advantage resulting from this detestable practice; the very appearances of truth are so little regarded, that lies are at present discharged in the air, and begin to hurt no body. When we hear a party-story from a stranger, we consider whether he is a whig or a tory that relates it, and immediately conclude they are words of course, in which the honest gentleman designs to recommend his zeal, without any concern for his veracity. A man is looked upon as bereft of all common sense, that gives credit to the relations of party writers; nay, his own friends shake their heads at him, and consider him in no other light than as an officious tool or a well meaning idiot. When it was formerly the fashion to husband a lie, and trump it up in some extraordinary emergency, it generally did execution, and was not a little serviceable to the faction that made use of it; but at present every man is upon his guard, the artifice has been too often repeated to take effect.

I HAVE frequently wondered to see men of probity, who would scorn to utter a falsehood for their own particular advantage, give so readily into a lie, when it becomes the voice of their faction, notwithstanding they are thoroughly sensible of it as such. How is it possible for those who are men of honour in their persons, thus to become notorious liars in their party? If we look into the bottom of this matter, we may find, I think, three reasons for it, and at the same time discover the insufficiency of these reasons to justify so criminal a practice.

IN the first place, men are apt to think that the guilt of a lie, and consequently the punishment, may be very much diminished, if not wholly worn out, by the multitudes of those who partake in it. Though the weight of a falsehood would be too heavy for one to bear, it grows light in their imaginations, when it is shared among many. But in this case a man may very much deceive himself; guilt, when it spreads through numbers, is not so properly divided as multiplied: every one is criminal in proportion to the offence which he commits, not to the number of those who are his companions in it. Both the crime and penalty lie as heavy upon every individual of the offending multitude, as they would upon any single person, had none shared with him in the offence. In a word, the division of guilt is like to that of matter; though it may be separated into infinite portions, every portion shall have the whole essence of matter in it, and consists of as many parts as the whole did before it was divided.

BUT in the second place, though multitudes who join in a lie, cannot exempt themselves from the guilt, they may from the shame of it. The scandal of a lie is in a manner lost and annihilated, when diffused among several thousands; as a drop of the blackest tincture wears away and vanishes when mixed and confused in a considerable body of water; the blot is still in it, but is not able to discover itself. This is certainly a very great motive to several party offenders, who avoid crimes, not as they are prejudicial to their virtue but to their reputation. It is enough to shew the weakness of this reason, which palliates guilt without removing it, that every man who is influenced by it declares himself in effect an infamous hypocrite, prefers the appearance of virtue to its reality, and is determined in his conduct neither by the dictates of his own conscience, the suggestions of true honour, nor the principles of religion.

THE third and last great motive for men's joining in a popular falshood, or, as I have hitherto called it, a party-lie, notwithstanding they are convinced of it as such, is the doing good to a cause, which every party may be supposed to look upon as the most meritorious. The unsoundness of this principle has been so often exposed, and is so universally acknowledged, that a man must be an utter stranger to the principles, either of natural religion or Christianity, who suffers himself to be guided by it. If a man might promote the supposed good of his country by the blackest calumnies and falsehoods, our nation abounds more in patriots than any other of the Christian world. When Pompey was desired not to set sail in a tempest that would hazard his life, "It is necessary for me, says he, to sail, but it is not necessary for me to live;" every man should say to himself with the same spirit, "It is my duty to speak truth, though it is not my duty to be in an office." One of the fathers hath carried this point so high, as to declare, "He would not tell a lie, though he were sure to gain heaven by it." However extravagant such a protestation may appear, every one will own, that a man may say very reasonably, "He would not tell a lie, if he were sure to gain hell by it;" or if you have a mind to soften the expression, that he would not tell a lie to gain any temporal reward by it, when he should run the hazard of losing much more than it was possible for him to gain. O

No. 508. Monday, October 13.

Omnes autem et habentur et dicuntur tyranni, qui potestate sunt perpetua, in ea civitate quæ libertate usa est. Corn. Nepos in Milt. c. 8.

For all those are accounted and denominated tyrants, who exercise a perpetual power in that state, which was before free.

THE following letters complain of what I have frequently observed with very much indignation; therefore I shall give them to the public in the words with which my correspondents, who suffer under the hardships mentioned in them, describe them.

Mr SPECTATOR,

IN former ages all pretensions to dominion have been supported and submitted to, either upon account of inheritance, conquest, or election: and all such persons who have taken upon them any sovereignty over their fellow-creatures upon any other account, have been always called Tyrants, not so much because they were guilty of any particular barbarities, as because every attempt to such a superiority was in its nature tyrannical. But there is another sort of potentates, who may with greater propriety be called tyrants than those last mentioned, both as they assume a despotic dominion over those as free as themselves, and as they support it by acts of notable oppression and injustice; and these are the rulers in all clubs and meetings. In other governments, the punishments of some have been alleviated by the rewards of others; but what makes the reign of these potentates so particularly grievous, is, that they are exquisite in punishing their subjects, at the same time they have it not in their power to reward them. That the reader may the better comprehend the nature of these monarchs, as well as the miserable state of those that are their vassals, I shall give an account of the king of the company I am fallen into, whom for his particular tyranny I shall call Dionysius; as also of the seeds that sprung up to this odd sort of empire.

Upon all meetings at taverns, 'tis necessary some one of the company should take it upon him to get all things in such order and readiness, as may contribute as much as possible to the felicity of the convention; such as hastning the fire, getting a sufficient number of candles, tasting the wine with a judicious smack, fixing the supper, and being brisk for the dispatch of it. Know then, that Dionysius went thro' these offices with an air that seemed to express a satisfaction rather in serving the public, than in gratifying any particular inclination of his own. We thought him a person of an exquisite palate, and therefore by consent beseeched him to be always our proveditor; which post, after he had handsomely denied, he ‘ could do no otherwise than accept. At first he made ‘ no other use of his power than in recommending such ‘ and such things to the company, ever allowing these ‘ points to be disputable: insomuch that I have often ‘ carried the debate for partridge, when his majesty has ‘ given intimation of the high relish of duck, but at ‘ the same time has chearfully submitted, and devour‘ ed his partridge with most gracious resignation. This ‘ submission on his side naturally produced the like on ‘ ours; of which he in a little time made such barba‘ rous advantage, as in all those matters, which be‘ fore seemed indifferent to him, to issue out certain e‘ dicts as uncontrollable and unalterable as the laws of ‘ the Medes and Persians. He is by turns outrageous, ‘ peevish, froward and jovial. He thinks it our duty, ‘ for the little offices, as proveditor, that in return all ‘ conversation is to be interrupted or promoted by his ‘ inclination for or against the present humour of the ‘ company. We feel, at present, in the utmost ex‘ tremity, the insolence of office; however, I being ‘ naturally warm, ventured to oppose him in a dispute ‘ about a haunch of venison. I was altogether for ‘ roasting, but Dionysius declared himself for boiling ‘ with so much prowess and resolution, that the cook ‘ thought it necessary to consult his own safety, rather ‘ than the luxury of my proposition. With the same ‘ authority that he orders what we shall eat and drink, ‘ he also commands us where to do it, and we change ‘ our taverns according as he suspects any treasonable ‘ practices in the settling the bill by the master, or ‘ sees any bold rebellion in point of attendance by the ‘ waiters. Another reason for changing the seat of ‘ empire, I conceive to be the pride he takes in the pro‘ mulgation of our slavery, tho’ we pay our club for ‘ our entertainments even in the palaces of our grand ‘ monarch. When he has a mind to take the air, a ‘ party of us are commanded out by way of life guards,

‘ and we march under as great restrictions as they do.
‘ If we meet a neighbouring king, we give or keep the ‘ way according as we are outnumbered or not; and ‘ if the train of each is equal in number, rather than ‘ give battle, the superiority is soon adjusted by a ‘ desertion from one of them.

‘ Now, the expulsion of these unjust rulers out of all ‘ societies would gain a man as everlasting a reputa‘ tion, as either of the Brutus’s got from their endea‘ vours to extirpate tyranny from among the Romans.
 ‘ I confess myself to be in a conspiracy against the usur‘ per of our club; and to shew my reading, as well as ‘ my merciful disposition, shall allow him ’till the ides ‘ of March to dethrone himself. If he seems to affect ‘ empire ’till that time, and does not gradually recede ‘ from the incursions he has made upon our liberties, ‘ he shall find a dinner dressed which he has no hand ‘ in, and shall be treated with an order, magnificence, ‘ and luxury as shall break his proud heart; at the same ‘ time that he shall be convinced in his stomach, he ‘ was unfit for his post, and a more mild and skilful ‘ prince receive the acclamations of the people, and ‘ be set up in his room: but, as Milton says,

—————“ These thoughts

“ Full counsel must mature. Peace is despair’d, “ And who can think submission? war, then, war, “ Open or understood, must be resolv’d.

I am, Sir, Your most obedient humble servant.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ I AM a young woman at a gentleman’s seat in the ‘ country, who is a particular friend of my father’s, ‘ and came hither to pass away a month or two with ‘ his daughters. I have been entertained with the ut‘ most civility by the whole family, and nothing has ‘ been omitted which can make my stay easy and a‘ greeable on the part of the family; but there is a gen‘ tleman here, a visitant, as I am, whose behaviour has ‘ given me great uneasinesses. When I first arrived ‘ here, he used me with the utmost complaisance; but ‘ forsooth, that was not with regard to my sex, and ‘ since he has no designs upon me, he does not know ‘ why he should distinguish me from a man in things ‘ indifferent. He is, you must know, one of those fa‘ miliar coxcombs, who have observed some well-bred ‘ men with a good grace converse with women, and ‘ say no fine things, but yet treat them with that sort ‘ of respect which flows from the heart and the under‘ standing, but is exerted in no professions of compli‘ ments. This puppy, to imitate this excellence, or a‘ void the contrary fault of being troublesome in com‘ plaissance, takes upon him to try his talent upon me, ‘ infomuch that he contradicts me upon all occasions,

‘ and one day told me, I lied. If I had stuck him with ‘ my bodkin, and behaved myself like a man, since he ‘ won’t treat me as a woman, I had, I think, served him ‘ right. I wish, Sir, you would please to give him ‘ some maxims of behaviour in these points, and re‘ solve me, If all maids are not in point of conversation ‘ to be treated by all batchelors as their mistresses? If ‘ not so, are they not to be used as gently as their sis‘ ters? Is it sufferable, that the fop of whom I com‘ plain should say, as he would rather have such a one ‘ without a groat, than me with the Indies? What ‘ right has any man to make suppositions of things not ‘ in his power, and then declare his will to the dislike ‘ of one that has never offended him? I assure you ‘ these are things worthy your consideration, and I ‘ hope we shall have your thoughts upon them. I am, ‘ though a woman, justly offended, ready to forgive ‘ all this, because I have no remedy but leaving very ‘ agreeable company sooner than I desire. This also ‘ is an heinous aggravation of his offence, that he is ‘ inflicting banishment upon me. Your printing this ‘ letter may perhaps be an admonition to reform him:
‘ As soon as it appears, I will write my name at the ‘ end of it, and lay it in his way; the making which ‘ just reprimand, I hope, you will put in the power of,
T Sir, Your constant reader, and humble servant.

No. 509. Tuesday, October 14.

Hominis frugi et temperantis functus officium.

TER. Heaut. act. 3. sc. 3.

Discharging the part of a good oeconomist.

THE useful knowledge in the following letter shall have a place in my paper, though there is nothing in it which immediately regards the polite or learned world; I say immediately, for upon reflexion every man will find there is a remote influence upon his own affairs, in the prosperity or decay of the trading part of mankind. My present correspondent, I believe, was never in print before; but what he says well deserves a general attention, though delivered in his own homely maxims, and a kind of proverbial simplicity; which sort of learning has raised more estates than ever were, or will be, from attention to Virgil, Horace, Tully, Seneca, Plutarch, or any of the rest, whom, I dare say, this worthy citizen would hold to be indeed ingenious, but unprofitable writers. But to the letter.

Mr WILLIAM SPECTATOR,

S I R,

Broadstreet, Oct. 10. 1712.

I ACCUSE you of many discourses on the subject of money, which you have heretofore promised the public, but have not discharged yourself thereof. But foras much as you seemed to depend upon advice from others what to do in that point, have sat down to write you the needful upon that subject. But, before I enter thereupon, I shall take this opportunity to observe to you, that the thriving frugal man shews it in every part of his expence, dress, servants, and house; and I must, in the first place, complain to you, as SPECTATOR, that in these particulars there is at this time, throughout the city of London, a lamentable change from that simplicity of manners which is the true source of wealth and prosperity. I just ‘ now said the man of thrift shews regularity in every ‘ thing; but you may, perhaps, laugh that I take no‘ tice of such a particular as I am going to do, for an ‘ instance that this city is declining, if their antient ‘ oeconomy is not restored. The thing which gives ‘ me this prospect, and so much offence, is the neglect ‘ of the Royal Exchange, I mean the edifice so called,

‘ and the walks appertaining thereunto. The Royal ‘ Exchange is a fabric that well deserves to be so cal‘ led, as well to express that our monarchs highest glo‘ ry and advantage consists in being the patrons of ‘ trade, as that it is commodious for business, and an ‘ instance of the grandeur both of prince and people.
‘ But alas! at present it hardly seems to be set apart ‘ for any such use or purpose. Instead of the assem‘ bly of honourable merchants, substantial tradesmen, ‘ and knowing masters of ships; the mumpers, the ‘ halt, the blind, and the lame; your venders of trash, ‘ apples, plumbs; your raggamuffians, rakehames, ‘ and wenches, have jostled the greater number of the ‘ former out of that place. Thus it is, especially on ‘ the evening-change: so that what with the din of ‘ squallings, oaths, and cries of beggars, men of the ‘ greatest consequence in our city absent themselves ‘ from the place. This particular, by the way, is of ‘ evil consequence: for if the Change be no place for ‘ men of the highest credit to frequent, it will not be ‘ a disgrace to those of less abilities to absent. I re‘ member the time when rascally company were kept ‘ out, and the unlucky boys with toys and balls were ‘ whipped away by a beadle. I have seen this done ‘ indeed of late, but then it has been only to chase ‘ the lads from chuck, that the beadle might seize ‘ their copper.

‘ I mu’st repeat the abomination, that the walnut ‘ trade is carried on by old women within the walks, ‘ which makes the place impassable by reason of shells ‘ and trash. The benches around are so filthy, that ‘ no one can sit down; yet the beadles and officers.

‘ have the impudence at Christmas to ask for their ‘ box, though they deserve the strapado. I do not ‘ think it impertinent to have mentioned this, because ‘ it speaks a neglect in the domestic care of the city, ‘ and the domestic is the truest picture of a man every ‘ where else.

‘ BUT I designed to speak on the business of money ‘ and advancement of gain. The man proper for this, ‘ speaking in the general, is of a sedate, plain, good ‘ understanding, not apt to go out of his way, but so ‘ behaving himself at home, that business may come ‘ to him. Sir William Turner, that valuable citizen, ‘ has left behind him a most excellent rule, and couch‘ ed it in very few words, suited to the meanest capa‘ city. He would say, Keep your shop, and your shop ‘ will keep you. It must be confessed, that if a man ‘ of a great genius could add steadiness to his vivacities, ‘ or substitute flower men, of fidelity, to transact the ‘ methodical part of his affairs, such a one would ‘ outstrip the rest of the world: but business and ‘ trade is not to be managed by the same heads ‘ which write poetry, and make plans for the conduct ‘ of life in general. So though we are at this day be‘ holden to the late witty and inventive duke of Buc‘ kingham for the whole trade and manufacture of ‘ glass, yet I suppose there is no one will aver, that, were ‘ his grace yet living, they would not rather deal with ‘ my diligent friend and neighbour, Mr Gumley, for ‘ any goods to be prepared and delivered on such a day, ‘ than he would with that illustrious mechanic above ‘ mentioned.

‘ No, no, Mr SPECTATOR, you wits must not pre‘ tend to be rich; and it is possible the reason may be,
‘ in some measure, because you despise, or at least you ‘ do not value it enough, to let it take up your chief ‘ attention; which the trader must do, or lose his cre‘ dit, which is to him what honour, reputation, fame, ‘ or glory is to other sorts of men.

‘ I SHALL not speak to the point of cash itself, ’till ‘ I see how you approve of these my maxims in gene‘ ral : But, I think, a speculation upon Many a little ‘ makes a mickle; a penny saved is a penny got; penny ‘ wise and pound foolish; it is need that makes the old ‘ wife trot, would be very useful to the world, and ‘ if you treated them with knowledge would be very ‘ useful to yourself, for it would make demands for ‘ your paper among those who have no notion of it at ‘ present. But of these matters more hereafter. If ‘ you did this, as you excell many writers of the pre‘ sent age for politeness, so you would outgo the au‘ thor of the true straps of razors for use.

‘ I SHALL conclude this discourse with an explana‘ tion of a proverb, which by vulgar error is taken ‘ and used when a man is reduced to an extremity, ‘ whereas the propriety of the maxim is to use it when ‘ you would say, there is plenty, but you must make ‘ such a choice as not to hurt another who is to come ‘ after you.

‘ MR TOBIAS HOBSON, from whom we have the ‘ expression, was a very honourable man, for I shall e‘ ver call the man so who gets an estate honestly. Mr ‘ Tobias Hobson was a carrier, and being a man of ‘ great abilities and invention, and one that saw where ‘ there might good profit arise, tho’ the duller men ‘ over-looked it; this ingenious man was the first in ‘ this island who let out hackney horses. He lived in ‘ Cambridge, and observing that the scholars rid hard, ‘ his manner was to keep a large stable of horses, with ‘ boots, bridles, and whips to furnish the gentlemen at ‘ once, without going from college to college to bor‘ row, as they have done since the death of this wor‘ thy man; I say, Mr Hobson kept a stable of forty good ‘ cattle, always ready and fit for travelling; but when ‘ a man came for a horse, he was led into the stable, ‘ where there was great choice, but he obliged him
‘ to take the horse which stood next to the stable door?

‘ so that every customer was alike well-served according to his chance; and every horse ridden with the same justice: from whence it became a proverb; when what ought to be your election was forced upon you, to say, Hobson’s Choice. This memorable man stands drawn in fresco at an inn (which he used) in Bishopgate-street, with an hundred pound bag under his arm, with this inscription upon the said bag;

The fruitful mother of an hundred more.

‘ WHATEVER tradesman will try the experiment, and begin the day after you publish this my discourse to treat his customers all alike, and all reasonably and honestly, I will insure him the same success.

I am, Sir, Your loving friend,

HEZEKIAH THRIFT.

No 510. Wednesday, October 15.

———Si sapias,

Neque præterquam quas ipse amor molestias

Habet addas; et illas, quas habet, recte feras.

TER. Eun. act. 1. sc. 1.

If you are wise, neither add to the troubles which attend the passion of love, and bear patiently those which are inseparable from it.

I WAS the other day driving in a hack thro’ Gerard-street, when my eye was immediately caught with the prettiest object imaginable, the face of a fair girl, between thirteen and fourteen, fixed at the chin to a painted sash and made part of the landscape. It seemed admirably done, and upon throwing myself eagerly out of the coach to look at it, it laughed and flung from the window. This amiable figure dwelt upon me; and I was considering the vanity of the girl, and her pleasant coquetry in acting a picture, till she was taken notice of, and raising the admiration of the beholders. This little circumstance made me run into reflexion upon the force of beauty, and the wonderful influence the female sex has upon the other part of the species. Our hearts are seized with their enchantments, and there are few of us, but brutal men, who by that hardness lose the chief pleasure in them, can resist their insinuations, tho' never so much against our own interest and opinion. It is common with women to destroy the good effects a man's following his own way and inclination might have upon his honour and fortune, by interposing their power over him in matters wherein they cannot influence him, but to his loss and disparagement. I do not know therefore a task so difficult in human life, as to be proof against the importunities of a woman a man loves. There is certainly no armour against tears, fullen looks, or at best constrained familiarities, in her whom you usually meet with transport and alacrity. Sir Walter Raleigh was quoted in a letter (of a very ingenious correspondent of mine) on this subject. That author, who had lived in courts, camps, travelled through many countries, and seen many men under several climates, and of as various complexions, speaks of our impotence to resist the wiles of women, in very severe terms. His words are as follow :

WHAT means did the devil find out, or what instruments did his own subtilty present him, as fittest and aptest to work his mischief by? Even the unquiet vanity of the woman; so as by Adam's hearkning to the voice of his wife, contrary to the express commandment of the living God, mankind by that her incantation became the subject of labour, sorrow, and death; the woman being given to man for a comforter and companion, but not for a counsellor. It is also to be noted by whom the woman was tempted; even by the most ugly and unworthy of all beasts, into whom the devil entered and persuaded. Secondly, what was the motive of her disobedience; even a desire to know what was most unfitting her knowledge; an affection which has ever since remained in all the posterity of her sex. Thirdly, what was it that moved the man to yield to her persuasions; even the same cause which hath moved all men since to the like consent, namely, an unwillingness to grieve her or make her sad, least she should pine and be overcome with sorrow. But if Adam in the state of perfection, and Solomon the son of David, God's chosen servant, and himself a man endued with the greatest wisdom, did both of them disobey their Creator by the persuasion and for the love they bare to a woman, it is not so wonderful as lamentable, that other men in succeeding ages have been allured to so many inconvenient and wicked practices by the persuasion of their wives, or other beloved darlings, who cover over and shadow many malicious purposes with a counterfeit passion of dissimulate sorrow and uneasiness.

THE motions of the minds of lovers are no where so well described as in the works of skilful writers for the stage. The scene between Fulvia and Curius, in the second act of Johnson's Catiline, is an excellent picture of the power of a lady over her gallant. The wench plays with his affections; and as a man of all places in the world wishes to make a good figure with his mistress, upon her upbraiding him with want of spirit, he alludes to enterprises which he cannot reveal but with the hazard of his life. When he is worked thus far, with a little flattery of her opinion of his gallantry, and desire to know more of it out of her overflowing fondness to him, he brags to her 'till his life is in her disposal.

WHEN a man is thus liable to be vanquished by the charms of her he loves, the safest way is to determine what is proper to be done, but to avoid all expostulation with her before he executes what he has resolved. Women are ever too hard for us upon a treaty, and one must consider how senseless a thing it is to argue with one whose looks and gestures are more prevalent with you, than your reason and arguments can be with her. It is a most miserable slavery to submit to what you disapprove, and give up a truth for no other reason, but that you had not fortitude to support you in asserting it. A man has enough to do to conquer his own unreasonable wishes and desires; but he does that in vain, if he has those of another to gratify. Let his pride be in his wife and family, let him give them all the conveniences of life in such a manner as if he were proud of them, but let it be his own innocent pride, and not their exorbitant desires, which are indulged by him. In this case all the little arts imaginable are used to soften a man's heart, and raise his passion above his understanding. But in all concessions of this kind, a man should consider whether the present he makes flows from his own love, or the importunity of his beloved: if from the latter, he is her slave; if from the former, her friend. We laugh it off, and do not weigh this subjection to women with that seriousness which so important a circumstance deserves. Why was courage given to man, if his wife's fears are to frustrate it? When this is once indulged, you are no longer her guardian and protector, as you were designed by nature, but, in compliance to her weaknesses, you have disabled yourself from avoiding the misfortunes into which they will lead you both, and you are to see the hour in which you are to be reproached by herself for that very complaisance to her. It is indeed the most difficult mastery over ourselves we can possibly attain, to resist the grief of her who charms us; but let the heart ake, be the anguish never so quick and painful, it is what must be suffered and passed thro', if you think to live like a gentleman, or be conscious to yourself that you are a man of honesty. The old argument, that You do not love me if you deny me this, which first was used to obtain a trifle, by habitual success will oblige the unhappy man who gives way to it, to resign the cause even of his country and his honour. T

No. 511. Thursday, October 16.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Quis non invenit turba quod amaret in illa?

OVID. Ars Am. l. 1. v. 175.

————— *Who could fail to find,
In such a croud, a mistress to his mind?*

Dear SPEC,

FINDING that my last letter took, I do intend to continue my epistolary correspondence with thee, on those dear confounded creatures, women. Thou knowest, all the little learning I am master of is upon that subject; I never looked in a book, but for their sakes. I have lately met with two pure stories for a Spectator, which I am sure will please mightily, if they pass through thy hands. The first of them I found by chance in an English book called Herodotus, that lay in my friend Dapperwit's window, as I visited him one morning. It luckily opened in the place where I met with the following account. He tells us, that it was the manner among the Persians to have several fairs in the kingdom, at which all the young unmarried women were annually exposed to sale. The men who wanted wives came hither to provide themselves: every woman was given to the highest bidder, and the money which she fetched laid aside for the public use, to be employed as thou shalt hear by and by. By this means the richest people had the choice of the market, and culled out all the most extraordinary beauties. As soon as the fair was thus picked, the refuse was to be distributed among the poor, and among those who could not go to the price of a beauty. Several of these married the agreeables, without paying a farthing for them, unless somebody chanced to think it worth his while to bid for them, in which case the best ‘ bidder was always the purchaser. But now you ‘ must know, SPEC, it happened in Persia as it does ‘ in our own country; that there were as many ugly ‘ women as beauties or agreeables; so that by conse‘ quence, after the magistrates had put off a great ‘ many, there were still a great many that stuck upon ‘ their hands. In order therefore to clear the market, ‘ the money which the beauties had sold for, was dis‘ posed of among the ugly: so that a poor man, who ‘ could not afford to have a beauty for his wife, was ‘ forced to take up with a fortune, the greatest portion ‘ being always given to the most deformed. To this ‘ the author adds, that every poor man was forced to ‘ live kindly with his wife, or in case he repented of ‘ his bargain, to return her portion with her to the next ‘ public sale.

‘ WHAT I would recommend to thee on this occa‘ sion is, to establish such an imaginary fair in Great ‘ Britain: thou couldst make it very pleasant, by match‘ ing women of quality with cobblers and carmen, or ‘ describing titles and garters leading off in great ce‘ remony shop keepers and farmer’s daughters. Tho’
‘ to tell the truth, I am confoundedly afraid that as ‘ the love of money prevails in our island more than ‘ it did in Persia, we should find that some of our great‘ est men would chuse out the portions and rival one ‘ another for the richest piece of deformity; and that ‘ on the contrary, the toasts and belles would be ‘ bought up by extravagant heirs, gamesters and spend‘ thrifts. Thou couldst make very pretty reflexions ‘ upon this occasion in honour of the Persian politics, ‘ who took care, by such marriages, to beautify the ‘ upper part of the species, and to make the greatest ‘ persons in the government the most graceful. But ‘ this I shall leave to thy judicious pen.

‘ I HAVE another story to tell thee, which I like‘ wise met with in a book. It seems the general of ‘ the Tartars, after having laid siege to a strong town ‘ in China, and taken it by storm, would set to sale all the women that were found in it. Accordingly, he put each of them into a sack, and after having thoroughly considered the value of the woman who was inclosed, marked the price that was demanded for her upon the sack. There were a great confluence of chapmen, that resorted from every part, with a design to purchase, which they were to do unfought unseen. The book mentions a merchant in particular, who observing one of the sacks to be marked pretty high, bargained for it, and carried it off with him to his house. As he was resting with it upon a half way bridge, he was resolved to take a survey of his purchase: upon opening the sack a little old woman popped her head out of it; at which the adventurer was in so great a rage, that he was going to shoot her out into the river. The old lady, however, begged him first of all to hear her story, by which he learned that she was sister to a great Mandarin, who would infallibly make the fortune of his brother-in-law as soon as he should know to whose lot she fell. Upon which the merchant again tied her up in his sack, and carried her to his house, where she proved an excellent wife, and procured him all the riches from her brother that she had promised him.

I FANCY, if I was disposed to dream a second time, I could make a tolerable vision upon this plan. I would suppose all the unmarried women in London and Westminster brought to market in sacks with their respective price on each sack. The first sack that is sold is marked with five thousand pounds: upon the opening of it, I find it filled with an admirable house-wife of an agreeable countenance: the purchaser, upon hearing her good qualities, pays down her price very cheerfully. The second I would open, should be a five hundred pound sack: the lady in it, to our surprise, has the face and person of a toast: as we are wondering how she came to be set at so low a price, we hear that she would have been valued at ten thousand pounds, but that ' the public had made these abatements for her being

 ' a scold. I would afterwards find some beautiful, mo' dest, and discreet woman, that should be the top of ' the market; and perhaps discover half a dozen romps
 ' tied up together in the same sack, at one hundred an
 ' head. The prude and the coquette should be valu' ed at the same price, tho' the first should go off the ' better of the two. I fancy thou wouldst like such a ' vision, had I time to finish it; because, to talk in thy ' own way, there is a moral in it. Whatever thou
 ' mayst think of it, pray thee do not make any of the ' queer apologies for this letter, as thou didst for my ' last. The women love a gay lively fellow, and are ' never angry at the ralleries of one who is their ' known admirer. I am always bitter upon them,
 ' but well with them. Thine,

O

HONEYCOMB.

No. 512. Friday, October 17.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Lectorem delectando, pariterque monendo.

HOR. Ars poet. v. 344.

Profit and pleasure, then, to mix with art.

FRANCIS.

THERE is nothing which we receive with so much reluctance as advice. We look upon the man who gives it us as offering an affront to our understanding, and treating us like children or idiots. We consider the instruction as an implicit censure, and the zeal which any one shews for our good on such an occasion, as a piece of presumption or impertinence. The truth of it is, the person who pretends to advise, does in that particular exercise a superiority over us, and can have no other reason for it, but that in comparing us with himself, he thinks us defective either in our conduct or our understanding. For these reasons, there is nothing so difficult as the art of making advice agreeable; and indeed all the writers, both ancient and modern, have distinguished themselves among one another, according to the perfection at which they have arrived in this art. How many devices have been made use of, to render this bitter potion palatable? Some convey their instructions to us in the best chosen words, others in the most harmonious numbers, some in points of wit, and others in short proverbs.

BUT among all the different ways of giving counsel, I think the finest, and that which pleases the most universally, is fable, in whatsoever shape it appears. If we consider this way of instructing or giving advice, it excels all others, because it is the least shocking, and the least subject to those exceptions which I have before mentioned.

THIS will appear to us, if we reflect in the first place, that upon the reading of a fable we are made to believe we advise ourselves. We peruse the author for the sake of the story, and consider the precepts rather as our own conclusions than his instructions. The moral insinuates itself imperceptibly, we are taught by surprise, and become wiser and better unawares. In short, by this method a man is so far over-reached, as to think he is directing himself, while he is following the dictates of another, and consequently is not sensible of that which is the most unpleasing circumstance in advice.

IN the next place, if we look into human nature, we shall find, that the mind is never so much pleased, as when she exerts herself in any action that gives her an idea of her own perfections and abilities. This natural pride and ambition of the soul is very much gratified in the reading of a fable: for in writings of this kind, the reader comes in for half of the performance; every thing appears to him like a discovery of his own; he is busied all the while in applying characters and circumstances, and is in this respect both a reader and a composer. It is no wonder therefore that on such occasions, when the mind is thus pleased with itself, and amused with its own discoveries, that it is highly delighted with the writing which is the occasion of it. For this reason the Abfalom and Achitophel was one of the most popular poems that ever appeared in English. The poetry is indeed very fine: but had it been much finer, it would not have so much pleased, without a plan which gave the reader an opportunity of exerting his own talents.

THIS oblique manner of giving advice is so inoffensive, that if we look into ancient histories, we find the wise men of old very often chose to give counsel to their kings in fables. To omit many which will occur to every one's memory, there is a pretty instance of this nature in a Turkish tale, which I do not like the worse for that little oriental extravagance which is mixed with it.

WE are told that the sultan Mahmoud, by his perpetual wars abroad, and his tyranny at home, had filled his dominions with ruin and desolation, and half unpeopled the Persian empire. The visier to this great sultan (whether an humourist or an enthusiast we are not informed) pretended to have learned of a certain dervise to understand the language of birds, so that there was not a bird that could open his mouth, but the visier knew what it was he said. As he was one evening with the emperor, in their return from hunting, they saw a couple of owls upon a tree that grew near an old wall out of a heap of rubbish. 'I would fain know, says the sultan, what these two owls are saying to one another; listen to their discourse, and give me an account of it.' The visier approached the tree, pretending to be very attentive to the two owls. Upon his return to the sultan, 'Sir, says he, I have heard part of their conversation, but dare not tell you what it is.' The sultan would not be satisfied with such an answer, but forced him to repeat word for word every thing the owls had said. 'You must know then, said the visier, that one of these owls

‘ has a son, and the other a daughter, between whom ‘ they are now upon a treaty of marriage. The fa‘ ther of the son said to the father of the daughter, ‘ in my hearing, Brother, I consent to this marriage, ‘ provided you will settle upon your daughter fifty ‘ ruined villages for her portion. To which the fa‘ ther of the daughter replied, Instead of fifty, I will ‘ give her five hundred, if you please. God grant a ‘ long life to sultan Mahmoud; whilst he reigns over ‘ us, we shall never want ruined villages.’

THE story says, the sultan was so touched with the fable, that he rebuilt the towns and villages which had been destroyed, and from that time forward consulted the good of his people.

To fill up my paper, I shall add a most ridiculous piece of natural magic, which was taught by no less a philosopher than Democritus, namely, that if the blood of certain birds which he mentioned, were mixed together, it would produce a serpent of such a wonderful virtue, that whoever did eat it should be skilled in the language of birds, and understand every thing they said to one another. Whether the dervise above mentioned might not have eaten such a serpent, I shall leave to the determinations of the learned. O

No. 513. Saturday, October 18.

[By MR ADDISON.]

——— Afflata est numine quando

Jam propiore dei———

VIRG. ÆN. 6. v. 50.

When all the god came rushing on her soul. DRYDEN.

THE following letter comes to me from that excellent man in holy orders, whom I have mentioned more than once as one of that society who assists me in my speculations. It is a thought in sickness, and of a very serious nature, for which reason I give it a place in the paper of this day.

S I R,

THE indisposition which has long hung upon me; is at last grown to such a head, that it must quickly make an end of me, or of itself. You may imagine, that whilst I am in this bad state of health, there are none of your works which I read with greater pleasure than your Saturday's papers. I should be very glad if I could furnish you with any hints for that day's entertainment. Were I able to dress up several thoughts of a serious nature, which have made great impressions on my mind during a long fit of sickness, they might not be an improper entertainment for that occasion.

AMONG all the reflexions which usually arise in the mind of a sick man, who has time and inclination to consider his approaching end, there is none more natural than that of his going to appear naked and unembodied before Him who made him. When a man considers, that as soon as the vital union is dissolved, he shall see that supreme Being, whom he now contemplates at a distance, and only in his works; or, to speak more philosophically, when by some faculty in the soul he shall have apprehended the Divine Being, and be more sensible of his presence, than we are now of the presence of any object, which the eye beholds; a man must be lost in carelessness and stupidity, who is not alarmed at such a thought. Dr. Sherlock, in his excellent treatise upon death, has represented, in very strong and lively colours, the state of the soul in its first separation from the body, with regard to that invisible world which every where surrounds us, though we are not able to discover it through this grosser world of matter, which is accommodated to our senses in this life. His words are as follow.

“ THAT death, which is our leaving this world, is nothing else but our putting off these bodies, teaches us, that it is only our union to these bodies, which “ intercepts the sight of the other world: the other “ world is not at such a distance from us, as we may “ imagine; the throne of God indeed is at a great re“ move from this earth, above the third heaven, where “ he displays his glory to those blessed spirits which “ encompass his throne; but as soon as we step out of “ these bodies, we step into the other world, which is “ not so properly another world (for there is the same “ heaven and earth still) as a new state of life. To “ live in these bodies is to live in this world; to live “ out of them is to remove into the next: for while “ our souls are confined to these bodies, and can look “ only through these material casements, nothing but “ what is material can affect us; nay, nothing but “ what is so gross, that it can reflect light, and con“ vey the shapes and colours of things with it to the “ eye: so that though, within this visible world, there “ be a more glorious scene of things than what appears “ to us, we perceive nothing at all of it; for this veil “ of flesh parts the visible and invisible world; but “ when we put off these bodies, there are new and “ surprising wonders present themselves to our views; “ when these material spectacles are taken off, the soul “ with its own naked eyes, sees what was invisible be“ fore: and then we are in the other world, when we “ can see it, and converse with it. Thus St Paul tells “ us, that when we are at home in the body, we are ab- “ sent from the Lord; but when we are absent from “ the body, we are present with the Lord, 2 Cor. v. 6. 8.

“ And methinks this is enough to cure us of our fond-“ nefs for these bodies, unless we think it more desir“ able to be confined to a prison, and to look through “ a grate all our lives, which gives us but a very nar“ row prospect, and that none of the best neither, than “ to be set at liberty to view all the glories of the world.
“ What would we give now for the least glimpse of “ that invisible world, which the first step we take out “ of these bodies will present us with? There are such “ things as eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither

“ hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive : “ death opens our eyes, enlarges our prospect, presents “ us with a new and more glorious world, which we “ can never see while we are shut up in flesh ; which “ should make us as willing to part with this veil, as “ to take the film off our eyes, which hinders our sight.”

‘ As a thinking man cannot but be very much affected with the idea of his appearing in the presence of that Being whom none can see and live, he must be much more affected when he considers that this Being whom he appears before, will examine all the actions of his past life, and reward or punish him accordingly. I must confess that I think there is no scheme of religion, besides that of Christianity, which can possibly support the most virtuous person under this thought. Let a man’s innocence be what it will, let his virtues rise to the highest pitch of perfection attainable in this life, there will be still in him so many secret sins, so many human frailties, so many offences of ignorance, passion and prejudice, so many unguarded words and thoughts, and in short so many defects in his best actions, that, without the advantages of such an expiation and atonement as Christianity has revealed to us, it is impossible that he should be cleared before his sovereign Judge, or that he should be able to stand in his sight. Our holy religion suggests to us the only means whereby our guilt may be taken away, and our imperfect obedience accepted.

‘ It is this series of thought that I have endeavoured to express in the following hymn, which I have composed during this my sickness.

WHEN rising from the bed of death,
O’erwhelm’d with guilt and fear,
I see my Maker, face to face,
O how shall I appear !
If yet, while pardon may be found,
And mercy may be sought,

My heart with inward horror shrinks,
 And trembles at the thought;
 When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclos'd,
 In majesty severe,
 And sit in judgment on my soul,
 O how shall I appear!

But thou hast told the troubled mind,
 Who does her sins lament,
 The timely tribute of her tears
 Shall endless woe prevent.

Then see the sorrow of my heart,
 Ere yet it be too late;
 And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
 To give these sorrows weight.

For never shall my soul despair
 Her pardon to procure,
 Who knows thy only Son has dy'd
 To make her pardon sure.

‘ THERE is a noble hymn in French, which Monsieur Bayle has celebrated for a very fine one, and which the famous author of the art of speaking calls an admirable one, that turns upon a thought of the same nature. If I could have done it justice in English, I would have sent it you translated: it was written by Monsieur Des Barreaux, who had been one of the greatest wits and libertines in France, but in his last years was as remarkable a penitent.

GRAND Dieu, tes jugemens sont remplis d'equite; Toujours tu prens plaisir a nous etre propice.
 Mais j'ai tant fait de mal, que jamais ta bonte
 Ne me pardonnera, sans choquer ta justice.
 Oui, mon Dieu, la grandeur de mon impiete
 Ne laisse a ton pouvoir que le choix du suplice;
 Ton interest s'oppose a ma felicite;
 Et ta clemence meme attend que je perisse.
 Contente ton desir, puis qu'il t'est glorieux;
 Offense toy des pleurs qui coulent de mes yeux;

*Tonne, frappe, il est tems, rends moi guerre pour guerre;
J'adore en perissant la raison qui t'aigrit.*

Mais dessus quel endroit tombera ton tonnerre, Qui ne soit tout couvert du sang de Jesus Christ.

‘ If these thoughts may be serviceable to you, I de‘ fire you would place them in a proper light, and am ‘ ever with great sincerity,

O

S I R, Yours, &c.

No. 514. Monday, October 20.

— *Me Parnassi deserta per ardua dulcis
Raptat amor; juvat ire jugis qua nulla priorum Castaliam molli divertitur orbita clivo.*

VIRG. Georg. 3. v. 291.

*Put the commanding muse my chariot guides,
Which o'er the dubious cliff securely rides;
And pleas'd I am no beaten road to take,
But first the way to new discoveries make.* DRYDEN.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ I CAME home a little later than usual the other ‘ night, and not finding myself inclined to sleep, I ‘ took up Virgil to divert me till I should be more dis‘ posed to rest. He is the author whom I always chuse ‘ an such occasions, no one writing in so divine, so har‘ monious, nor so equal a strain, which leaves the mind ‘ composed, and softened into an agreeable melanco‘ ly; the temper, in which, of all others, I chuse to ‘ close the day. The passages I turned to were those ‘ beautiful raptures in his Georgics, where he professes ‘ himself entirely given up to the muses, and smit with ‘ the love of poetry, passionately wishing to be tran‘ sported to the cool shades and retirements of the ‘ mountain Hæmus. I closed the book and went to ‘ bed. What I had just before been reading made so ‘ strong an impression on my mind, that fancy seemed ‘ almost to fulfil to me the wish of Virgil, in present‘ ing to me the following vision.

‘ M E T H O U G H T I was on a sudden placed in the ‘ plains of Bœotia, where at the end of the horizon I ‘ saw the mountain Parnassus rising before me. The ‘ prospect was of so large an extent, that I had long ‘ wandered about to find a path which should directly ‘ lead me to it, had I not seen at some distance a grove ‘ of trees, which, in a plain that had nothing else re‘ markable enough in it to fix my sight, immediately ‘ determined me to go thither. When I arrived at it, ‘ I found it parted out into a great number of walks ‘ and alleys, which often widened into beautiful open‘ ings, as circles or ovals, set round with yews and cy‘ presses, with niches, grottos, and caves placed on ‘ the sides, encompassed with ivy. There was no ‘ found to be heard in the whole place, but only that ‘ of a gentle breeze passing over the leaves of the for‘ est, every thing besides was buried in a profound si‘ lence. I was captivated with the beauty and retire‘ ment of the place, and never so much, before that ‘ hour, was pleased with the enjoyment of myself. I in‘ dulg’d the humour, and suffered myself to wander ‘ without choice or design. At length, at the end of ‘ a range of trees, I saw three figures seated on a bank ‘ of moss, with a silent brook creeping at their feet.
‘ I adored them as the tutelar divinities of the place, ‘ and stood still to take a particular view of each of ‘ them. The middlemost, whose name was Solitude, ‘ sat with her arms across each other, and seemed ra‘ ther pensive and wholly taken up with her own ‘ thoughts, than any ways grieved or displeased.
‘ The only companions which she admitted into that ‘ retirement, was the goddess Silence, who sat on ‘ her right hand with her finger on her mouth, and ‘ on her left Contemplation, with her eyes fixed upon ‘ the heavens. Before her lay a celestial globe, with ‘ several schemes of mathematical theorems. She pre‘ vented my speech with the greatest affability in the ‘ world: Fear not, said she, I know your request be‘ fore you speak it; you would be led to the mountain ‘ of the Muses; the only way to it lies through this ‘ place, and no one is so often employed in conducting ‘ persons thither as myself. When she had thus spo‘ ken, she rose from her seat, and I immediately placed ‘ myself under her direction; but whilst I passed thro’

‘ the grove, I could not help inquiring of her who ‘ were the persons admitted into that sweet retirement.
‘ Surely, said I, there can nothing enter here but vir‘ tue and virtuous thoughts: the whole wood seemed ‘ designed for the reception and reward of such per‘ sons as have spent their lives according to the dictates ‘ of their conscience and the commands of the gods.
‘ You imagine right, said she; assure yourself this ‘ place was at first designed for no other: such it con‘ tinued to be in the reign of Saturn, when none en‘ tered here but holy priests, deliverers of their coun‘ try from oppression and tyranny, who reposed them‘ selves here after their labours, and those whom the ‘ study and love of wisdom had fitted for divine con‘ versation. But now it is become no less dangerous ‘ than it was before desirable: vice has learned so to ‘ mimic virtue, that it often creeps in hither under its ‘ disguise. See there! just before you, Revenge stalk‘ ing by, habited in the robe of Honour. Observe not ‘ far from him Ambition standing alone; if you ask ‘ him his name, he will tell you it is Emulation, or ‘ Glory. But the most frequent intruder we have is ‘ Lust, who succeeds now the deity to whom in better ‘ days this grove was entirely devoted. Virtuous Love, ‘ with Hymen, and the Graces attending him, once ‘ reigned in this happy place; a whole train of vir‘ tues waited on him, and no dishonourable thought ‘ durst presume for admittance; but now! how is the ‘ whole prospect changed? and how seldom renewed ‘ by some few who dare despise sordid wealth, and i‘ magine themselves fit companions for so charming a ‘ divinity.

‘ THE goddess had no sooner said this, but we were ‘ arrived at the utmost boundaries of the wood, which ‘ lay contiguous to a plain that ended at the foot of ‘ the mountain. Here I kept close to my guide, be‘ ing solicited by several phantoms, who assured me ‘ they would shew me a nearer way to the mountain ‘ of the Muses. Among the rest Vanity was extremely ‘ importunate, having deluded infinite numbers, whom ‘ I saw wandering at the foot of the hill. I turned ‘ away from this despicable troop with disdain, and ‘ addressing myself to my guide, told her, that as I ‘ had some hopes I should be able to reach up part of ‘ the ascent, so, I despaired of having strength enough ‘ to attain the plain on the top. But being informed ‘ by her, that it was impossible to stand upon the sides,

‘ and that if I did not proceed onwards, I should irre-‘ coverably fall down to the lowest verge, I resolved ‘ to hazard any labour and hardship in the attempt:
‘ so great a desire had I of enjoying the satisfaction I ‘ hoped to meet with at the end of my enterprize!

‘ THERE were two paths, which led up by different ‘ ways to the summit of the mountain; the one was ‘ guarded by the genius which presides over the mo‘ ment of our births. He had it in charge to examine ‘ the several pretensions of those who desired to pass ‘ that way, but to admit none excepting those only ‘ on whom Melpomene had looked with a propitious ‘ eye at the hour of their nativity. The other way ‘ was guarded by Diligence, to whom many of those ‘ persons applied who had met with a denial the other ‘ way; but he was so tedious in granting their request, ‘ and indeed after admittance, the way was so very in‘ tricate and laborious, that many, after they had made ‘ some progress, chose rather to return back than pro‘ ceed, and very few persisted so long as to arrive at ‘ the end they proposed. Besides those two paths, ‘ which at length severally led to the top of the moun‘ tain, there was a third made up of these two, which ‘ a little after the entrance joined in one. This carried those happy few, whose good fortune it was to find it, directly to the throne of Apollo. I don't know whether I should even now have had the resolution to have demanded entrance at either of these doors, had I not seen a peasant-like man (followed by a numerous and lovely train of youths of both sexes) insist upon entrance for all whom he led up. He put me in mind of the country clown who is painted in the map for leading Prince Eugene over the Alps. He had a bundle of papers in his hand, and producing several, which, he said, were given to him by hands which he knew Apollo would allow as passes; among which, methought, I saw some of my own writing. The whole assembly was admitted, and gave, by their presence, a new beauty and pleasure to these happy mansions. I found the man did not pretend to enter himself, but served as a kind of forester in the lawns to direct passengers, who, by their own merit, or instructions he procured for them, had virtue enough to travel that way. I looked very attentively upon this kind homely benefactor, and forgive me, Mr SPECTATOR, if I own to you I took him for yourself. We were no sooner entered, but we were sprinkled three times with water of the fountain of Aganippe which had power to deliver us from all harms, but only envy, which reacheth even to the end of our journey. We had not proceeded far in the middle path, when we arrived at the summit of the hill, where there immediately appeared to us two figures, which extremely engaged my attention; the one was a young nymph in the prime of her youth and beauty; she had wings on her shoulders and feet, and was able to transport herself to the most distant regions in the smallest space of time. She was continually varying her dress, sometimes into the most natural and becoming habits in the world, and at others into the most wild and freakish garb that can be imagined. There stood by her a man full aged, and of great gravity, who corrected her inconsistencies, by shewing them in his mirror, and still flung her affected and unbecoming ornaments down the mountain, which fell in the plain below, and were gathered up and wore with great satisfaction by those that inhabited it. The name of the nymph was Fancy, the daughter of Liberty, the most beautiful of all the mountain nymphs. The other was Judgment, the offspring of Time, and the only child he acknowledged to be his. A youth, who sat upon a throne just between them, was their genuine offspring; his name was Wit, and his seat was composed of the works of the most celebrated authors. I could not but see with a secret joy, that though the Greeks and Romans made the majority, yet our own countrymen were the next both in number and dignity. I was now at liberty to take a full prospect of that delightful region: I was inspired with new vigour and life, and saw every thing in nobler and more pleasing views than before: I breathed a purer æther in a sky which was a continued azure, gilded with perpetual sunshine. The two summits of the mountain rose on each side, and formed in the midst a most delicious vale, the habitation of the Muses, and of such as had composed works worthy of immortality. Apollo was seated upon a throne of gold, and for a canopy an aged laurel spread its boughs and its shade over his head. His bow and quiver lay at his feet. He held his harp in his hand, whilst the Muses round about him celebrated with hymns his victory over the serpent Python, and sometimes sung in softer notes the loves of Leucothoe and Daphnis. Homer, Virgil, and Milton, were seated the next to them. Behind were a great number of others, among whom I was surprised to see some in the habit of Laplanders, who, notwithstanding the uncouthness of their dress, had lately obtained a place upon the mountain. I saw Pindar walking all alone, no one daring to accost him, till Cowley joined himself to him; but growing weary of one who almost walked him out of breath, he left him for Horace and Anacreon, with whom he seemed infinitely delighted.

A LITTLE further I saw another groupe of figures; I made up to them, and found it was Socrates dictating to Xenophon, and the spirit of Plato; but most of all, Musæus had the greatest audience about him. I was at too great a distance to hear what he said, or to discover the faces of his hearers; only I thought I now perceived Virgil, who had joined them, and stood in a posture full of admiration at the harmony of his words.

LASTLY, at the very brink of the hill I saw Boccacini sending dispatches to the world below of what happened upon Parnassus; but I perceived he did it without leave of the Muses, and by stealth, and was unwilling to have them revised by Apollo. I could now from this height and serene sky behold the infinite cares and anxieties with which mortals below sought out their way through the maze of life. I saw the path of virtue lie straight before them, whilst Interest, or some malicious demon, still hurried them out of the way. I was at once touched with pleasure at my own happiness, and compassion at the sight of their inextricable errors. Here the two contending passions rose so high, that they were inconsistent with the sweet repose I enjoyed, and awaking with a sudden start, the only consolation I could admit of for my loss, was the hopes that this relation of my dream will not displease you. T

No. 515. Tuesday, October 21.

Pudet me et miseret, qui harum mores cantabat mihi, Monuisse frustra—— Ter. Heaut. act. 2. sc. 2.

I am ashamed and grieved, that I neglected his advice who gave me the character of these creatures.

Mr SPECTATOR,

I AM obliged to you for printing the account I lately sent you of a coquette who disturbed a sober congregation in the city of London. That intelligence ended at her taking coach, and bidding the driver go where he knew. I could not leave her so, but dogged her, as hard as she drove, to Paul's church-yard, where there was a stop of coaches attending company coming out of the cathedral. This gave me an opportunity to hold up a crown to her coachman, who gave me the signal, that he would hurry on and make no haste, as you know the way is when they favour a chace. By his many kind blunders, driving against other coaches, and slipping off some of his tackle, I could keep up with him, and lodged my fine lady in the parish of St James's. As I guessed when I first saw her at church, her business is to win hearts and throw them away, regarding nothing but the triumph. I had the happiness, by tracing her through all with whom I heard she was acquainted, to find one who I found was intimate with a friend of mine, and to be introduced to her notice. I have made so good use of my time, as to procure from that intimate of her's one of her letters, which she writ to her when in the country. This epistle of her own may serve to alarm the world against all her ordinary life, as mine, I hope, did those who shall behold her at church. The letter was written last winter to the lady who gave it me; and I doubt not but you will find it the soul of an happy self-loving dame, that takes all the admiration

“ she can meet with, and returns none of it in love to “ her admirers.

Dear Jenny,

“ I AM glad to find you are likely to be disposed of “ in marriage so much to your approbation as you “ tell me. You say you are afraid only of me, for I “ shall laugh at your spouse’s airs. I beg of you not “ to fear it, for I am too nice a discernner to laugh at “ any, but whom most other people think fine fellows; “ so that your dear may bring you hither as soon as “ his horses are in case enough to appear in town, and “ you be very safe against any rallery you may appre“ hend from me; for I am surrounded with coxcombs “ of my own making, who are all ridiculous in a man“ ner: your good-man, I presume, cannot exert him“ self. As men who cannot raise their fortunes, and “ are uneasy under the incapacity of shining at court, “ rail at ambition; so do awkward and insipid wo“ men, who cannot warm the hearts and charm the “ eyes of men, rail at affectation: but she that has the “ joy of seeing a man’s heart leap into his eyes, at be“ holding her, is in no pain for want of esteem among a “ crew of that part of her own sex, who have no spirit “ but that of envy, and no language but that of ma“ lice. I do not in this, I hope, express myself insen“ sible of the merit of Leodacia, who lowers her beau“ ty to all but her husband, and never spreads her “ charms but to gladden him who has a right in them:
“ I say, I do honour to those who can be coquettes,
“ and are not such; but I despise all who would be so,
“ and in despair of arriving at it themselves, hate and “ vilify all those who can. But, be that as it will, in “ answer to your desire of knowing my history, one “ of my chief present pleasures is in country dances:
“ and, in obedience to me, as well as the pleasure of “ coming up to me with a good grace, shewing them“ selves in their address to others in my presence, and “ the like opportunities, they are all proficient that “ way: and I had the happiness of being the other “ night where we made fix couple, and every woman’s “ partner a professed lover of mine. The wildest ima“ gination cannot form to itself on any occasion, high“ er delight, than I acknowledge myself to have been “ in all that evening. I chose out of my admirers a “ set of men who most love me, and gave them part“ ners of such of my own sex who most envied me.

“ My way is, when any man who is my admirer “ pretends to give himself airs of merit, as at this time “ a certain gentleman you know did, to mortify him “ by favouring in his presence the most insignificant “ creature I can find. At this ball I was led into the “ company by pretty Mr Fanfly, who, you know, is “ the most obsequious, well shaped, well-bred wo“ man’s man in town. I at first entrance declared him “ my partner if I danced at all; which put the whole “ assembly into a grin, as forming no terrors from such “ a rival. But we had not been long in the room, be“ fore I overheard the meritorious gentleman above-“ mentioned say with an oath, there is no rallery in “ the thing, she certainly loves the puppy. My gen“ tleman, when we were dancing, took an occasion to be “ very soft in his oglings upon a lady he danced with,
“ and whom he knew of all women I love most to “ outshine. The contest began who should plague the “ other most. I, who do not care a farthing for him, “ had no hard task to outvex him. I made Fanfly, “ with a very little encouragement cut capers coupee,
“ and then sink with all the air and tenderness imagin“ able. When he performed this, I observed the gen“ tleman you know of fall into the same way, and i“ mitate as well as he could the despised Fanfly. I “ cannot well give you, who are so grave a country “ lady, an idea of the joy we have when we see a stub“ born heart breaking, or a man of sense turning fool “ for our sakes; but this happened to our friend, and “ I expect his attendance whenever I go to church,

“ to court, to the play, or to the park. This is a sa“ crifice due to us women of genius, who have the e“ loquence of beauty, an easy mien. I mean by an easy “ mien, one which can be on occasion easily affected:
 “ for I must tell you, dear Jenny, I hold one maxim, “ which is an uncommon one, to wit, that our great“ est charms are owing to affectation. ’Tis to that “ our arms can lodge so quietly just over our hips, and “ the fan can play without any force or motion but “ just of the wrist. ’Tis to affectation we owe the pen“ sive attention of Deidamia at a tragedy, the scorn“ ful approbation of Dulcimara at a comedy, and the “ lowly aspect of Lanquicella at a sermon.

“ To tell you all the plain truth, I know no pleasure “ but in being admired, and have yet never failed of “ attaining the approbation of the man whose regard “ I had a mind to. You see all the men who make a “ figure in the world (as wise a look as they are pleas“ ed to put upon the matter) are moved by the same “ vanity as I am. What is there in ambition, but to “ make other people’s wills depend upon your’s?
 “ This indeed is not to be aimed at by one who has a “ genius no higher than to think of being a very good “ housewife in a country gentleman’s family. The “ care of poultry and pigs are great enemies to the “ countenance: the vacant look of a fine lady is not “ to be preserved, if she admits any thing to take up “ her thoughts but her own dear person. But I in“ terrupt you too long from your cares, and myself “ from my conquests.

I am, Madam, your most humble servant.

“ GIVE me leave, Mr SPECTATOR, to add her friend’s “ answer to this epistle, who is a very discreet ingeni“ ous woman.

Dear Gatty,

“ I Take your rallery in very good part, and am o“ bliged to you for the free air with which you “ speak of your own gaieties. But this is but a bar-“ren superficial pleasure. Indeed, Gatty, we are made “for men, and in serious sadness I must tell you, whe“ther you yourself know it or no, all these gallantries “tend to no other end but to be a wife and mother as “fast as you can. T

I am, Madam, your most humble servant.

No 516. Wednesday, October 22.

Immortale odium et nunquam sanabile vulnus.

Inde furor vulgo, quod numina vicinorum

Odit uterque locus, quum solos credit habendos

Esse deos quos ipse colit— JUV. sat. 15. v. 24.

—A grutch, time out of mind, begun,

And mutually bequeath'd from fire to son:

Religious spite, and pious spleen bred first

The quarrel, which so long the bigots nurs't:

Each calls the other's god a senseless stock;

His own, divine.

TATE.

OF all the monstrous passions and opinions which have crept into the world, there is none so wonderful as that those who profess the common name of Christians, should pursue each other with rancour and hatred for difference in their way of following the example of their Saviour. It seems so natural that all who pursue the steps of any leader should form themselves after his manners, that it is impossible to account for effects so different from what we might expect from those who profess themselves followers of the highest pattern of meekness and charity, but by ascribing such effects to the ambition and corruption of those who are so audacious, with souls full of fury, to serve at the altars of the God of peace.

THE massacres to which the church of Rome has animated the ordinary people, are dreadful instances of the truth of this observation; and whoever reads the history of the Irish rebellion, and the cruelties which ensued thereupon, will be sufficiently convinced to what rage poor ignorants may be worked up by those who profess holiness, and become incendiaries, and, under the dispensation of grace, promote evils abhorrent to nature.

THIS subject and catastrophe, which deserve so well to be remarked by the Protestant world, will, I doubt not, be considered by the reverend and learned prelate that preaches to-morrow, before many of the descendants of those who perished on that lamentable day, in a manner suitable to the occasion, and worthy his own great virtue and eloquence.

I SHALL not dwell upon it any further, but only transcribe out of a little tract, called, The Christian Hero, published in 1701, what I find there in honour of the renowned hero William III. who rescued that nation from the repetition of the same disasters. His late majesty, of glorious memory, and the most Christian king, are considered at the conclusion of that treatise as heads of the Protestant and Roman Catholic world, in the following manner.

‘ THERE were not ever, before the entrance of the ‘ Christian name into the world, men who have main‘ tained a more renowned carriage, than the two great ‘ rivals who possess the full fame of the present age, and ‘ will be the theme and examination of the future.
‘ They are exactly formed by nature for those ends to ‘ which heaven seems to have sent them among us:
‘ both animated with a restless desire of glory, but pur‘ sue it by different means, and with different motives.
‘ To one it consists in an extensive undisputed empire ‘ over his subjects, to the other in their rational and ‘ voluntary obedience: one’s happiness is founded in ‘ their want of power, the other’s in their want of ‘ desire to oppose him. The one enjoys the summit of ‘ fortune with the luxury of a Persian, the other with the ‘ moderation of a Spartan: the one is made to oppress, ‘ the other to relieve the oppressed: the one is satisfi‘ ed with the pomp and ostentation of power to prefer

‘ and debase his inferiors, the other delighted only with ‘ the cause and foundation of it to cherish and protect ‘ them. To one therefore religion is but a convenient ‘ disguise, to the other a vigorous motive of action.

‘ FOR without such ties of real and solid honour, ‘ there is no way of forming a monarch, but after the ‘ Machiavillian scheme, by which a prince must ever ‘ seem to have all virtues, but really to be master of none; ‘ but is to be liberal, merciful and just, only as they ‘ serve his interests; while, with the noble art of hypo‘ crisy, empire would be to be extended, and new con‘ quests be made by new devices, by which prompt ‘ address his creatures might insensibly give law in the ‘ business of life, by leading men in the entertainment ‘ of it.

‘ THUS when words and show are apt to pass for ‘ the substantial things they are only to express, there ‘ would need no more to enslave a country but to a‘ dorn a court; for while every man’s vanity makes ‘ him believe himself capable of becoming luxury, en‘ joyments are a ready bait for sufferings, and the ‘ hopes of preferment invitations to servitude; which ‘ slavery would be coloured with all the agreements, ‘ as they call it, imaginable. The noblest arts and ‘ artists, the finest pens and most elegant minds, jointly ‘ employed to set it off, with the various embellishments ‘ of sumptuous entertainments, charming assemblies,
‘ and polished discourses; and those apostate abilities ‘ of men, the adored monarch might profusely and ‘ skilfully encourage, while they flatter his virtue, and ‘ gild his vice at so high a rate, that he, without scorn
‘ of the one, or love of the other, would alternately ‘ and occasionally use both: so that his bounty should ‘ support him in his rapines, his mercy in his cruelties.

‘ NOR is it to give things a more severe look than is ‘ natural, to suppose such must be the consequences of ‘ a prince’s having no other pursuit than that of his ‘ own glory; for if we consider an infant born into ‘ the world, and beholding itself the mightiest thing

‘ in it, itself the present admiration and future prospect ‘ of a fawning people, who profess themselves great or ‘ mean, according to the figure he is to make amongst ‘ them, what fancy would not be debauched to be‘ lieve they were, but what they professed themselves, ‘ his mere creatures, and use them as such by purcha‘ sing with their lives a boundless renown, which he,
‘ for want of a more just prospect, would place in the ‘ number of his slaves, and the extent of his territo‘ ries? Such undoubtedly would be the tragical ef‘ fects of a prince’s living with no religion, which are ‘ not to be surpassed but by his having a false one.

‘ If ambition were spirited with zeal, what would ‘ follow, but that his people should be converted into ‘ an army, whose swords can make right in power, and ‘ solve controversy in belief? And if men should be ‘ stiff-necked to the doctrine of that visible church, let ‘ them be contented with an oar and a chain, in the ‘ midst of stripes and anguish, to contemplate on him, ‘ whose yoke is easy, and whose burden is light.

‘ With a tyranny begun on his own subjects, and ‘ indignation that others draw their breath indepen‘ dent of his frown or smile, why should he not pro‘ ceed to the seizure of the world? and if nothing but ‘ the thirst of sway were the motive of his actions, why ‘ should treaties be other than mere words, or solemn ‘ national compacts be any thing but an halt in the ‘ march of that army, who are never to lay down their ‘ arms, till all men are reduced to the necessity of hang‘ ing their lives on his wayward will; who might su‘ pinely, and at leisure, expiate his own sins by o‘ ther men’s sufferings, while he daily meditates new ‘ slaughter, and new conquest?

‘ For mere man, when giddy with unbridled pow‘ er, is an insatiate idol, not to be appeased by myriads ‘ offered to his pride, which may be puffed up by the ‘ adulation of a base and prostrate world, into an o‘ pinion that he is something more than human, by ‘ being something less; and, alas! what is there that

‘ mortal man will not believe of himself, when com‘ plimented with the attributes of God? He can then ‘ conceive thoughts of a power as omnipresent as his.
‘ But should there be such a foe of mankind now up‘ on earth, have our sins so far provoked heaven, that ‘ we are left utterly naked to his fury? Is there no ‘ power, no leader, no genius, that can conduct and ‘ animate us to our death or our defence? yes, our ‘ great God never gave one to reign by his permission, ‘ but he gave to another also to reign by his grace.

‘ ALL the circumstances of the illustrious life of our ‘ prince, seem to have conspired to make him the ‘ check and bridle of tyranny; for his mind has been ‘ strengthened and confirmed by one continual strug‘ gle, and heaven has educated him by adversity to a ‘ quick sense of the distresses and miseries of man‘ kind, which he was born to redress: in just scorn of ‘ the trivial glories and light ostentations of power, ‘ that glorious instrument of providence moves, like ‘ that, in a steady, calm, and silent course, independ‘ ent either of applause or calumny; which renders ‘ him, if not in a political, yet in a moral, a philoso‘ phic, an heroic, and a christian sense, an absolute mo‘ narch: who, satisfied with this unchangeable, just ‘ and ample glory, must needs turn all his regards ‘ from himself to the service of others; for he begins ‘ his enterprises with his own share in the success of ‘ them; for integrity bears in itself its reward, nor ‘ can that which depends not on event ever know ‘ disappointment.

‘ WITH the undoubted character of a glorious cap‘ tain, and (what he much more values than the most ‘ splendid titles) that of a sincere and honest man, he ‘ is the hope and stay of Europe, an universal good ‘ not to be engrossed by us only, for distant potentates ‘ implore his friendship, and injured empires court ‘ his assistance. He rules the world, not by an inva‘ sion of the people of the earth, but the address of its ‘ princes; and if that world should be again roused

‘ from the repose which his prevailing arms had given ‘ it, why should we not hope that there is an Almigh‘ ty, by whose influence the terrible enemy, that thinks ‘ himself prepared for battle, may find he is but ripe ‘ for destruction? and that there may be in the womb ‘ of time great incidents, which may make the cataf‘ trophe of a prosperous life as unfortunate as the par‘ ticular scenes of it were successful? For there does ‘ not want a skilful eye and resolute arm to observe and ‘ grasp the occasion: a prince, who from——

‘——Fuit Ilium et ingens

‘ Gloria——

VIRG. Æn. 2. v. 325.

‘ Troy is no more, and Ilium was a town.

No. 517.

Thursday, October 23.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Heu pietas! heu prisca fides!———

VIRG. Æn. 6. v. 878.

Mirroure of antient faith!

Undaunted worth! inviolable truth! DRYDEN.

WE last night received a piece of ill news at our club, which very sensibly afflicted every one of us. I question not but my readers themselves will be troubled at the hearing of it. To keep them no longer in suspense, Sir ROGER DE COVERLEY is dead. He departed this life at his house in the country, after a few weeks sickness. Sir ANDREW FREEPORT has a letter from one of his correspondents in those parts, that informs him the old man caught a cold at the county sessions, as he was very warmly promoting an address of his own penning, in which he succeeded according to his wishes. But this particular comes from a Whig justice of peace, who was always Sir ROGER's enemy and antagonist. I have letters both from the chaplain and captain SENTRY which mention nothing of it, but are filled with many particulars to the honour of the good old man. I have likewise a letter from the butler, who took so much care of me last summer when I was at the knight's house. As my friend the butler mentions, in the simplicity of his heart, several circumstances the others have passed over in silence, I shall give my reader a copy of his letter, without any alteration or diminution.

Honoured Sir,

‘ K NOWING that you was my old master's good ‘ friend, I could not forbear sending you the me‘ lancholy news of his death, which has afflicted the ‘ whole country, as well as his poor servants, who ‘ loved him, I may say, better than we did our lives.
‘ I am afraid he caught his death the last county-ses‘ sions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor ‘ widow woman, and her fatherless children, that had ‘ been wronged by a neighbouring gentleman; for ‘ you know, Sir, my good master was always the poor ‘ man's friend. Upon his coming home, the first ‘ complaint he made was, that he had lost his roast‘ beef stomach, not being able to touch a sirloin, which ‘ was served up according to custom; and you know ‘ he used to take great delight in it. From that time ‘ forward he grew worse and worse, but still kept a ‘ good heart to the last. Indeed we were once in great ‘ hope of his recovery, upon a kind message that was ‘ sent him from the widow lady whom he had made ‘ love to the forty last years of his life, but this only ‘ proved a lightning before death. He has bequeath‘ ed to this lady, as a token of his love, a great pearl ‘ necklace, and a couple of silver bracelets set with ‘ jewels, which belonged to my good old lady his mo‘ ther: he has bequeathed the fine white gelding, that ‘ he used to ride a hunting upon, to his chaplain, be‘ cause he thought he would be kind to him, and has ‘ left you all his books. He has, moreover, bequeath‘ ed to the chaplain a very pretty tenement with good ‘ lands about it. It being very a cold day when he ‘ made his will, he left for mourning, to every man

‘ in the parish, a great frize-coat, and to every woman
‘ a black riding-hood. It was a most moving sight ‘ to see him take leave of his poor servants, commend‘ ing us all for our fidelity, whilst we were not able to ‘ speak a word for weeping. As we most of us are ‘ grown grey-headed in our dear master’s service, he has ‘ left us pensions and legacies, which we may live very ‘ comfortably upon the remaining part of our days. He ‘ has bequeathed a great deal more in charity, which ‘ is not yet come to my knowledge, and it is peremp‘ torily said in the parish, that he has left money to build ‘ a steeple to the church; for he was heard to say some ‘ time ago that if he lived two years longer, Coverley ‘ church should have a steeple to it. The chaplain ‘ tells every body that he made a very good end, and ne‘ ver speaks of him without tears. He was buried, ‘ according to his own directions, among the family ‘ of the COVERLEYS, on the left hand of his father Sir ‘ Arthur. The coffin was carried by six of his te‘ nants, and the pall held up by six of the quorum: the ‘ whole parish followed the corpse with heavy hearts, ‘ and in their mourning suits, the men in frize, and the ‘ women in riding-hoods. Captain SENTRY, my mas‘ ter’s nephew, has taken possession of the hall house, ‘ and the whole estate. When my old master saw ‘ him a little before his death, he shook him by the ‘ hand, and wished him joy of the estate which was ‘ falling to him, desiring him only to make a good use ‘ of it, and to pay the several legacies, and the gifts ‘ of charity which he told him he had left as quit-‘ rents upon the estate. The captain truly seems a ‘ courteous man, tho’ he says but little. He makes ‘ much of those whom my master lov’d, and shews ‘ great kindnesses to the old house-dog, that you ‘ know my poor master was so fond of. It would have ‘ gone to your heart to have heard the moans the ‘ dumb creature made on the day of my master’s death.
‘ He has never joyed himself since; no more has any ‘ of us. ’Twas the melancholiest day for the poor

‘ people that ever happened in Worcestershire. This ‘ is all from,

Honoured Sir, Your most sorrowful servant,

EDWARD BISCUIT.

P. S. My master desired, some weeks before he died, ‘ that a book which comes up to you by the carrier, ‘ should be given to Sir ANDREW FREEPORT, in his ‘ name.

THIS letter, notwithstanding the poor butler’s manner of writing it, gave us such an idea of our good old friend, that upon the reading of it there was not a dry eye in the club. Sir ANDREW opening the book, found it to be a collection of acts of parliament. There was in particular the act of uniformity, with some passages in it marked by Sir ROGER’s own hand. Sir ANDREW found that they related to two or three points, which he had disputed with Sir ROGER the last time he appeared at the club. Sir ANDREW, who would have been merry at such an incident on another occasion, at the sight of the old man’s hand-writing, burst into tears, and put the book into his pocket. Captain SENTRY informs me, that the knight has left rings and mourning for every one in the club. O

No. 518. Friday, October 24.

— *Miserum est alienis incumbere famæ,
Ne collapsa ruant subductis tecta columnis.*

JUV. sat. 8. v. 76.

‘Tis poor relying on another’s fame:

For, take the pillars but away, and all

The superstructure must in ruins fall. STEPNEY.

THIS being a day of business with me, I must make the present entertainment like a treat at an house-warming, out of such presents as have been sent me by my guests. The first dish which I serve up is a letter come fresh to my hand.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ I T is with inexpressible sorrow that I hear of the ‘ death of good Sir ROGER, and do heartily con-‘ dole with you upon so melancholy an occasion. I ‘ think you ought to have blackened the edges of a ‘ paper which brought us so ill news, and to have had ‘ it stamped likewise in black. It is expected of you ‘ that you should write his epitaph, and, if possible, ‘ fill his place in the club with as worthy and divert‘ ing a member. I question not but you will receive ‘ many recommendations from the public of such as ‘ will appear candidates for that post.

‘ SINCE I am talking of death, and have mentioned ‘ an epitaph, I must tell you, Sir, that I have made ‘ discovery of a church yard in which I believe you ‘ might spend an afternoon, with great pleasure to ‘ yourself and to the public: it belongs to the church ‘ of Stebon-heath, commonly called Stepney. Whe‘ ther or no it be that the people of that parish have ‘ a particular genius for an epitaph, or that there be ‘ some poet among them who undertakes that work
‘ by the great, I cannot tell; but there are more re‘ markable inscriptions in that place than in any o‘ ther I have met with; and I may say without vani‘ ty, that there is not a gentleman in England better ‘ read in tomb-stones than myself, my studies having ‘ laid very much in church-yards. I shall beg leave to ‘ send you a couple of epitaphs, for a sample of those ‘ I have just now mentioned. They are written in a ‘ different manner; the first being in the diffused and ‘ luxuriant, the second in the close contracted stile. The ‘ first has much of the simple and pathetic; the second is ‘ something light, but nervous. The first is thus:

Here Thomas Sapper lies interr'd. Ah why!

Born in New-England, did in London die;

Was the third son of eight, begot upon

His mother Martha by his father John.

Much favour'd by his prince he 'gan to be,

But nipt by death at th' age of twenty three.

Fatal to him was that we small-pox name,
 By which his mother and two brethren came
 Also to breathe their last, nine years before,
 And now have left their father to deplore
 The loss of all his children, with his wife,
 Who was the joy and comfort of his life.

The second is as follows:

Here lies the body of Daniel Saul, Spittlefield's weaver, and that's all.

' I WILL not dismiss you, whilst I am upon this sub' ject, without sending a short epitaph which I once
 ' met with, tho' I cannot possibly recollect the place.
 ' The thought of it is serious, and, in my opinion, the ' finest that I ever met with upon this occasion. You ' know, Sir, it is usual, after having told us the name ' of the person who lies interred, to launch out into ' his praises. This epitaph takes a quite contrary turn,
 ' having been made by the person himself some time
 ' before his death.

Hic jacet R. C. in expectatione diei supremi. Qua-lis erat, dies iste indicabit.

' HERE lieth R. C. in expectation of the last day.
 ' What sort of man he was, that day will discover.

I am, Sir, &c.

The following letter is dated from Cambridge.

S I R,

' HAVING lately read among your speculations,
 ' an essay upon physiognomy, I cannot but think ' that if you made a visit to this antient university,
 ' you might receive very considerable lights upon that ' subject, there being scarce a young fellow in it who ' does not give certain indications of his particular hu' mour and disposition conformable to the rules of that ' art. In courts and cities every body lays a constraint
 ' upon his countenance, and endeavours to look like
 ' the rest of the world, but the youth of this place,
 ' having not yet formed themselves by conversation,
 ' and the knowledge of the world, give their limbs
 ' and features their full play.

‘ As you have considered human nature in all its ‘ lights, you must be extremely well apprised, that there ‘ is a very close correspondence between the outward ‘ and inward man; that scarce the least dawning, the ‘ least parturiency towards a thought can be stirring in ‘ the mind of man, without producing a suitable re‘ volution in his exteriors, which will easily discover ‘ itself to an adept in the theory of the phiz. Hence ‘ it is, that the intrinsic worth and merit of a son of ‘ Alma Mater is ordinarily calculated from the cast of ‘ his visage, the contour of his person, the mechanism ‘ of his dress, the disposition of his limbs, the manner ‘ of his gait and air, with a number of circumstances ‘ of equal consequence and information: the practiti‘ oners in this art often make use of a gentleman’s eyes ‘ to give ’em light into the posture of his brains; take ‘ a handle from his nose, to judge of the size of his in‘ tellects; and interpret the over-much visibility and ‘ pertness of one ear, as an infallible mark of reprobation,
‘ and a sign the owner of so saucy a member fears ‘ neither God nor man. In conformity to this scheme, ‘ a contracted brow, a lumpish down-cast look, a sober ‘ sedate pace, with both hands dangling quiet and steady ‘ in lines exactly parallel to each lateral pocket of ‘ the galligaskins, is logic, metaphysics and mathematics ‘ in perfection. So likewise the Belles Lettres are typi‘ fied by a faunter in the gait, a fall of one wing of ‘ the peruke backward, an insertion of one hand in ‘ the fob, and a negligent swing of the other, with a ‘ pinch of right and fine Barcelona between finger and ‘ thumb, a due quantity of the same upon the upper ‘ lip, and a noddle-case loaden with pulvil. Again, a ‘ grave solemn stalking pace is heroic poetry, and po‘ litics; an unequal one, a genius for the ode, and the ‘ modern ballad; and an open breast with an audacious ‘ display of the Holland shirt, is constructed a fatal ‘ tendency to the art military.

‘ I MIGHT be much larger upon these hints, but I ‘ know whom I write to. If you can graft any spe‘culations upon them, or turn them to the advantage ‘of the persons concerned in them, you will do a work ‘very becoming the British Spectator, and oblige

Your very humble servant, TOM TWEER.

No. 519. Saturday, October 25.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Inde hominum pecudumque genus, vitæque volantum, Et quæ marmoreo fert monstra sub æquore pontus.

VIRG. ÆN. 6. v. 728.

*Hence men and beasts the breath of life obtain,
 And birds of air, and monsters of the main.*

DRYDEN.

THOUGH there is a great deal of pleasure in contemplating the material world, by which I mean that system of bodies into which nature has so curiously wrought the mass of dead matter with the several relations which those bodies bear to one another; there is still, methinks, something more wonderful and surprising in contemplations on the world of life, by which I mean all those animals with which every part of the universe is furnished. The material world is only the shell of the universe: the world of life are its inhabitants.

If we consider those parts of the material world which lie the nearest to us, and are therefore subject to our observations and inquiries, it is amazing to consider the infinity of animals with which it is stocked. Every part of matter is peopled: every green leaf swarms with inhabitants. There is scarce a single humour in the body of a man, or of any other animal, in which our glasses do not discover myriads of living creatures. The surface of animals is also covered with other animals, which are in the same manner the basis of other animals that live upon it; nay, we find in the most solid bodies, as in marble itself, innumerable cells and cavities that are crowded with such imperceptible inhabitants, as are too little for the naked eye to discover. On the other hand, if we look into the more bulky parts of nature, we see the seas, lakes and rivers teeming with numberless kinds of living creatures: we find every mountain and marsh, wilderness and wood, plentifully stocked with birds and beasts, and every part of matter affording proper necessities and conveniences for the livelihood of multitudes which inhabit it.

THE author of the Plurality of worlds draws a very good argument from this consideration, for the peopling of every planet; as indeed it seems very probable from the analogy of reason, that if no part of matter, which we are acquainted with, lies waste and useless, those great bodies, which are at such a distance from us, should not be desert and unpeopled, but rather that they should be furnished with beings adapted to their respective situations.

EXISTENCE is a blessing to those beings only which are endowed with perception, and is in a manner thrown away upon dead matter, any farther than as it is subservient to beings which are conscious of their existence. Accordingly we find, from the bodies which lie under our observation, that matter is only made as the basis and support of animals, and that there is no more of the one, than what is necessary for the existence of the other.

INFINITE goodness is of so communicative a nature, that it seems to delight in the conferring of existence upon every degree of perceptive being. As this is a speculation, which I have often perused with great pleasure to myself, I shall enlarge farther upon it, by considering that part of the scale of beings which comes within our knowledge.

THERE are some living creatures which are raised but just above dead matter. To mention only that species of shell-fish, which are formed in the fashion of a cone, that grow to the surface of several rocks, and immediately die upon their being sever'd from the place where they grow. There are many other creatures but one remove from these, which have no other sense besides that of feeling and taste. Others have still an additional one of hearing; others of smell, and others of sight. It is wonderful to observe, by what a gradual progress the world of life advances thro' a prodigious variety of species, before a creature is formed that is complete in all its senses; and even among these there is such a different degree of perfection in the sense which one animal enjoys beyond what appears in another, that though the sense in different animals be distinguished by the same common denomination, it seems almost of a different nature. If after this we look into the several inward perfections of cunning and sagacity, or what we generally call instinct, we find them rising after the same manner imperceptibly one above another, and receiving additional improvements, according to the species in which they are implanted. This progress in nature is so very gradual, that the most perfect of an inferior species comes very near to the most imperfect of that which is immediately above it.

THE exuberant and overflowing goodness of the supreme being, whose mercy extends to all his works is plainly seen, as I have before hinted, from his having made so very little matter, at least what falls within our knowledge, that does not swarm with life: nor is his goodness less seen in the diversity, than in the multitude of living creatures. Had he only made one species of animals, none of the rest would have enjoyed the happiness of existence: he has, therefore, specified in his creation every degree of life, every capacity of being. The whole chasm of nature, from a plant to a man, is filled up with divers kinds of creatures, rising one over another, by such a gentle and easy ascent, that the little transitions and deviations from one species to another are almost insensible. This intermediate space is so well husbanded and managed, that there is scarce a degree of perception which does not appear in some one part of the world of life. Is the goodness, or wisdom of the Divine Being, more manifested in this his proceeding?

THERE is a consequence, besides those I have already mentioned, which seems very naturally deducible from the foregoing considerations. If the scale of being rises by such a regular progress, so high as man, we may, by a parity of reason suppose that it still proceeds gradually through those beings which are of a superior nature to him, since there is an infinitely greater space and room for different degrees of perfection, between the Supreme Being and man, than between man and the most despicable insect. The consequence of so great a variety of beings which are superior to us, from that variety which is inferior to us, is made by Mr. Locke, in a passage which I shall here set down, after having premised, that notwithstanding there is such infinite room between man and his maker for the creative power to exert itself in, it is impossible that it should ever be filled up, since there will be still an infinite gap or distance between the highest created being, and the power which produced him.

“ THAT there should be more species of intelligent “ creatures above us, than there are of sensible and “ material below us, is probable to me from hence ; “ that in all the visible corporeal world, we see no “ chasms, or no gaps. All quite down from us, the “ descent is by easy steps, and a continued series of “ things, that in each remove differ very little one “ from the other. There are fishes that have wings, “ and are not strangers to the airy region : and there “ are some birds, that are inhabitants of the water, “ whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh so like “ in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on “ fish-days. There are animals so near of kin both “ to birds and beasts, that they are in the middle bē-“ tween both : amphibious animals link the terrestrial “ and aquatic together : seals live at land and at sea, “ and porpoises have the warm blood and entrails of “ a hog ; not to mention what is confidently reported

“ of mermaids or sea-men. There are some brutes, “ that seem to have as much knowledge and reason as “ some that are called men; and the animal and ve“ getable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you “ will take the lowest of one, and the highest of the “ other, there will scarce be perceived any great dif“ ference between them: and so on till we come to “ the lowest and the most inorganical parts of matter, “ we shall find every where that the several species “ are linked together, and differ but in almost insen“ sible degrees. And when we consider the infinite “ power and wisdom of the Maker, we have reason to “ think that it is suitable to the magnificent harmony “ of the universe, and the great design and infinite “ goodness of the Architect, that the species of crea“ tures should also, by gentle degrees, ascend upwards “ from us towards his infinite perfection, as we see “ they gradually descend from us downward: which, “ if it be probable, we have reason then to be per“ suaded, that there are far more species of creatures “ above us, than there are beneath; we being in de“ grees of perfection much more remote from the in“ finite Being of God, than we are from the lowest “ state of being, that which approaches nearest to no“ thing. And yet of all those distinct species, we have “ no clear distinct ideas.”

In this system of being, there is no creature so wonderful in its nature, and which so much deserves our particular attention, as man, who fills up the middle space between the animal and intellectual nature, the visible and invisible world, and is that link in the chain of beings which has been often termed the Nexus u- triusque mundi. So that he who in one respect is associated with angels and archangels, may look upon a Being of infinite perfection as his father, and the highest order of spirits as his brethren, may in another respect say to corruption, thou art my father, and to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister. O

No. 520. Monday, October 27.

Quis desiderio sit pudor aut modus

Tam chari capitis!—— HOR. Od. 24. l. i. v. i.

Why should we stop the tender tear?

Why blush to weep for one so dear?

FRANCIS.

MR SPECTATOR,

THE just value you have expressed for the matrimonial state, is the reason that I now venture to write to you, without fear of being ridiculous; and confess to you, that though it is three months since I lost a very agreeable woman, who was my wife, my sorrow is still fresh; and I am often, in the midst of company, upon any circumstance that revives her memory, with a reflexion what she would say or do on such an occasion; I say, upon any occurrence of that nature, which I can give you a sense of, though I cannot express it wholly, I am all over softness, and am obliged to retire, and give way to a few sighs and tears, before I can be easy. I cannot but recommend the subject of male widowhood to you, and beg of you to touch upon it by the first opportunity. To those who have not lived like husbands during the lives of their spouses, this would be a tasteless jumble of words; but to such (of whom there are not a few) who have enjoyed that state with the sentiments proper for it, you will have every line, which hits the sorrow, attended with a tear of pity and consolation. For I know not by what goodness of providence it is, that every gush of passion is a step towards the relief of it; and there is a certain comfort in the very act of sorrowing, which, I suppose, arises from a secret consciousness in the mind, that the affliction it is under flows from a virtuous cause. My concern is not indeed so outrageous as at the first transport; for I think it has subsided rather into a sober state of mind than any actual perturbation of spirit. There might be rules formed for men's be‘haviour on this great incident, to bring them from ‘that misfortune into the condition I am at present;

‘which is, I think, that my sorrow has converted all ‘roughness of temper into meekness, good-nature, and ‘complacency: but indeed, when in a serious and ‘lonely hour I present my departed comfort to my i‘magination, with that air of persuasion in her coun‘tenance when I have been in passion, that sweet af‘fability when I have been in good humour, that ten‘der compassion when I have had any thing which ‘gave me uneasiness; I confess to you I am inconsol‘able, and my eyes gush with grief as if I had seen her ‘but just then expire. In this condition I am broken ‘in upon by a charming young woman, my daugh‘ter, who is the picture of what her mother was on ‘her wedding-day. The good girl strives to comfort ‘me; but how shall I let you know that all the com‘fort she gives me is to make my tears flow more ea‘sily! The child knows she quickens my sorrows, and ‘rejoices my heart at the same time. Oh, ye learn‘ed! tell me by what word to speak a motion of the ‘soul, for which there is no name. When she kneels
‘and bids me be comforted, she is my child; when I ‘take her in my arms, and bid her say no more, she is ‘my very wife, and is the very comforter I lament the ‘loss of. I banish her the room, and weep aloud that ‘I have lost her mother, and that I have her.

‘Mr SPECTATOR, I wish it were possible for you to ‘have a sense of these pleasing perplexities; you might ‘communicate to the guilty part of mankind, that ‘they are incapable of the happiness which is in the ‘very sorrows of the virtuous.

‘But pray spare me a little longer; give me leave ‘to tell you the manner of her death. She took leave ‘of all her family, and bore the vain application of ‘medicines with the greatest patience imaginable.
‘When the physician told her she must certainly die, ‘she desired, as well as she could, that all who were ‘ present except myself, might depart the room. She ‘ said she had nothing to say, for she was resigned, and ‘ I knew all she knew that concerned us in this world; ‘ but she desired to be alone, that in the presence of ‘ God only she might, without interruption, do her ‘ last duty to me, of thanking me for all my kindness ‘ to her; adding, that she hoped in my last moments ‘ I should feel the same comfort for my goodness to ‘ her, as she did in that she had acquitted herself with ‘ honour, truth and virtue to me.

‘ I CURB myself, and will not tell you that this ‘ kindness cut my heart in twain, when I expected an ‘ accusation for some passionate starts of mine, in some ‘ parts of our time together, to say nothing but thank ‘ me for the good, if there was any good suitable to ‘ her own excellence! All that I had ever said to her,
‘ all the circumstances of sorrow and joy between us, ‘ crowded upon my mind in the same instant; and ‘ when immediately after I saw the pangs of death ‘ come upon that dear body which I had often em‘ braced with transport, when I saw those cherishing ‘ eyes begin to be ghastly, and their last struggle to be ‘ to fix themselves on me, how did I lose all patience!
‘ She expired in my arms, and in my distraction I ‘ thought I saw her bosom still heave. There was ‘ certainly life yet still left: I cried, she just now spoke ‘ to me: but alas! I grew giddy, and all things mov‘ ed about me from the distemper of my own head; ‘ for the best of women was breathless and gone for ever.

‘ Now the doctrine I would, methinks, have you ‘ raise from this account I have given you, is, that ‘ there is a certain equanimity in those who are good ‘ and just, which runs into their very sorrow, and dis‘ appoints the force of it. Though they must pass ‘ through afflictions in common with all who are in ‘ human nature, yet their conscious integrity shall un‘ dermine their affliction; nay, that very affliction shall ‘ add force to their integrity, from a reflexion of the ‘ use of virtue in the hour of affliction. I sat down

‘ with a design to put you upon giving us rules how ‘ to overcome such griefs as these, but I should rather ‘ advise you to teach men to be capable of them.

‘ You men of letters have what you call the fine ‘ taste in your apprehensions of what is properly done ‘ or said: there is something like this deeply ingrafted ‘ in the soul of him who is honest and faithful in all ‘ his thoughts and actions. Every thing which is false, ‘ vicious, or unworthy, is despicable to him, though all ‘ the world should approve it. At the same time he ‘ has the most lively sensibility in all enjoyments and ‘ sufferings which it is proper for him to have, where ‘ any duty of life is concerned. To want sorrow, when ‘ you in decency and truth should be afflicted, is, I ‘ should think, a greater instance of a man’s being a ‘ blockhead, than not to know the beauty of any pas‘ sage in Virgil. You have not yet observed, Mr SPEC-‘ TATOR, that the fine gentlemen of this age set up ‘ for hardness of heart, and humanity has very little ‘ share in their pretences. He is a brave fellow who ‘ is always ready to kill a man he hates, but he does ‘ not stand in the same degree of esteem who laments ‘ for the woman he loves. I should fancy you might ‘ work up a thousand pretty thoughts, by reflecting ‘ upon the persons most susceptible of the sort of sor‘ row I have spoken of; and I dare say you will find ‘ upon examination, that they are the wisest and the ‘ bravest of mankind, who are the most capable of it.
‘ I am,

NORWICH,
7^o Octobris, 1712.

T

S I R,

Your most humble servant,

F. J.

No. 521. Tuesday, October 28.

Vera redit facies, dissimulata perit.

P. Arb.

The real face returns, the counterfeit is lost.

Mr SPECTATOR,

I HAVE been for many years loud in this assertion, that there are very few that can see or hear, I mean that can report what they have seen or heard; and this through incapacity or prejudice, one of which disables almost every man who talks to you from representing things as he ought. For which reason I am come to a resolution of believing nothing I hear; and I condemn the man given to narration under the appellation of a matter-of-fact man; and according to me, a matter-of-fact man, is one whose life and conversation is spent in the report of what is not matter-of-fact.

I REMEMBER when Prince Eugene was here, there was no knowing his height or figure, till you, Mr SPECTATOR, gave the public satisfaction in that matter. In relations, the force of the expression lies very often more in the look, the tone of the voice, or the gesture, than the words themselves; which being repeated in any other manner by the undiscerning, bear a very different interpretation from their original meaning. I must confess I formerly have turned this humour of mine to very good account; for whenever I heard any narration uttered with extraordinary vehemence, and grounded upon considerable authority, I was always ready to lay any wager that it was not so. Indeed I never pretended to be so rash, as to fix the matter any particular way in opposition to theirs; but as there are a hundred ways of any thing happening, besides that it has happened, I only controverted its falling out in that one manner as they settled it, and left it to the ninety-nine other ways, and consequently had more probability of success. I had arrived at a particular skill in warming a man so far in his narration, as to make him throw in a little of the marvellous, and then, if he has much fire, the next degree is the impossible. Now this is always the time for fixing the wager. But this requires the nicest management, otherwise very probably the dispute may arise to the old determination by battle. In these conceits I have been very fortunate, and have won some wagers of those who have professedly valued themselves upon intelligence, and have put themselves to great charge and expence to be misinformed considerably sooner than the rest of the world.

HAVING got a considerable sum by this my opposition to public report, I have brought myself now to so great a perfection in inattention, more especially to party-relations, that at the same time I seem with greedy ears to devour up the discourse, I certainly do not know one word of it, but pursue my own course of thought, whether upon business or amusement, with much tranquillity: I say inattention, because a late act of parliament has secured all party-liars from the penalty of a wager, and consequently made it unprofitable to attend them. However good-breeding obliges a man to maintain the figure of the keenest attention, the true posture of which in a coffee-house I take to consist in leaning over a table, with the edge of it pressing hard upon your stomach: for the more pain the narration is received with, the more gracious is your bending over. Besides that, the narrator thinks you forget your pain, by the pleasure of hearing him.

FORT Knock has occasioned several very perplexed and inelegant heats and animosities; and there was one t'other day in a coffee-house where I was, that took upon him to clear that business to me, for he said he was there. I knew him to be that sort of man that had not strength of capacity to be informed of any thing that depended merely upon his being an eye-witness, and therefore was fully satisfied he could give me no information, for the very same reason he believed he could, for he was there. However, I heard him with the same greediness as Shakspeare describes in the following lines :

“ I saw a smith stand on his hammer, thus,

“ With open mouth swallowing a taylor's news.

I CONFESS of late I have not been so much amazed at the declaimers in coffee houses as I formerly was, being satisfied that they expect to be rewarded for their vociferations. Of these liars there are two sorts. The genius of the first consists in much impudence and a strong memory ; the others have added to these qualifications a good understanding and smooth language. These therefore have only certain heads, which they are as eloquent upon as they can, and may be called embellishers ; the others repeat only what they hear from others as literally as their parts or zeal will permit, and are called reciters. Here was a fellow in town some years ago, who used to divert himself by telling a lie at Charing-cross in the morning at eight of the clock, and then following it through all parts of the town till eight at night ; at which time he came to a club of his friends, and diverted them with an account of what censure it had at Will's in Covent-garden, how dangerous it was believed to be at Child's, and what inferences they drew from it with relation to stocks at Jonathan's. I have had the honour to travel with this gentleman I speak of in search of one of his falsehoods ; and have been present when they have described the very man they have spoken to, as him who first reported it, tall or short, black or fair, a gentleman or raggamuffian, according as they liked the intelligence. I have heard one of our ingenious writers of news say, that when he has had a customer come with an advertisement of an apprentice, or a wife run away, he has desired the advertiser to compose himself a little before he dictated the description of the offender: for when a person is put into a public paper by a man who is angry with him, the real description of such person is hid in the deformity with which the angry man described him; therefore this fellow always made his customers describe him as he would the day before he offended, or else he was sure he would never find him out. These and many other hints I could suggest to you for the elucidation of all fictions; but I leave it to your own sagacity to improve or neglect this speculation.

I am, Sir, your most obedient, humble servant.

Postscript to the Spectator, No. 502.

N. B. There are in the play of the Self-tormentor of Terence, which is allowed a most excellent comedy, several incidents which would draw tears from any man of sense, and not one which would move his laughter. T

No. 522. Wednesday, October 29.

— Adjuro nunquam eam me deserturum:

Non, sicapiundos mihi sciam esse inimicos omnes homines, Hanc mihi expetivi, contigit: conveniunt mores: valeant, Qui inter nos discidium volunt: hanc, nisi mors, mi a-dimet nemo.

Ter. Andr. act. 4. sc. 2.

I swear never to forsake her; no, tho' I were sure to make all men my enemies; her I desired; her I have obtain'd; our humours agree: perish all those who would separate us! Death alone shall deprive me of her.

I SHOULD esteem myself a very happy man, if my speculations could in the least contribute to the rectifying the conduct of my readers in one of the most important affairs of life, to wit, their choice in marriage. This state is the foundation of community, and the chief band of society; and I do not think I can be too frequent on subjects which may give light to my unmarried readers, in a particular which is so essential to their following happiness or misery. A virtuous disposition, a good understanding, an agreeable person, and an easy fortune, are the things which should be chiefly regarded on this occasion. Because my present view is to direct a young lady, who, I think, is now in doubt whom to take of many lovers, I shall talk at this time to my female reader. The advantages, as I was going to say, of sense, beauty and riches, are what are certainly the chief motives to a prudent young woman of fortune for changing her condition; but as she is to have her eye upon each of these, she is to ask herself whether the man who has most of these recommendations in the lump is not the most desirable? He that has excellent talents, with a moderate estate, and an agreeable person, is preferable to him who is only rich, if it were only that good faculties may purchase riches, but riches cannot purchase worthy endowments. I do not mean that wit, and a capacity to entertain, is what should be highly valued, except it is founded upon good nature and humanity. There are many ingenious men whose abilities do little else but make themselves and those about them uneasy: such are those who are far gone in the pleasures of the town, who cannot support life without quick sensations and gay reflexions, and are strangers to tranquillity, to right reason, and a calm motion of spirits without transport or dejection. These ingenious men, of all men living, are most to be avoided by her who would be happy in a husband. They are immediately fated with possession, and must necessarily fly to new acquisitions of beauty, to pass away the whiling moments and intervals of life; for with them every hour is heavy that is not joyful. But there is a sort of man of wit and sense, that can reflect upon his own make, and that of his partner, with the eyes of reason and honour, and who believes he offends against both these, if he does not look upon the woman (who chose him to be under his protection in sickness and health) with the utmost gratitude, whether, from that moment, she is shining or defective in person or mind: I say there are those who think themselves bound to supply with good nature the failings of those who love them, and who always think those the objects of love and pity, who came to their arms the objects of joy and admiration.

Of this latter sort is Lyfander, a man of wit, learning, sobriety and good nature, of birth and estate below no woman to accept, and of whom it might be said, should he succeed in his present wishes, his mistress raised his fortune, but not that she made it. When a woman is deliberating with herself whom she shall chuse of many near each other in their pretensions, certainly he of best understanding is to be preferred. Life hangs heavily in the repeated conversation of one who has no imagination to be fired at the several occasions and objects which come before him, or who cannot strike out of his reflexions new paths of pleasing discourse. Honest Will Thrash and his wife, though not married above four months, have scarce had a word to say to each other these six weeks; and one cannot form to one's self a fillier picture, than those two creatures in solemn pomp and plenty, unable to enjoy their fortunes, and at a full stop among a crowd of servants, to whose taste of life they are beholden for the little satisfactions by which they can be understood to be so much as barely in being. The hours of the day, the distinctions of noon and night, dinner and supper, are the greatest notices they are capable of. This is perhaps representing the life of a very modest woman, joined to a dull fellow, more insipid than it really deserves: but I am sure it is not to exalt the commerce with an ingenious companion too high, to say that every new accident or object, which comes into such a gentleman's way, gives his wife new pleasures and satisfactions. The approbation of his words and actions is a continual new feast to her, nor can she enough applaud her good fortune in having her life varied every hour, her mind more improved, and her heart more glad from every circumstance which they meet with. He will lay out his invention in forming new pleasures and amusements, and make the fortune she has brought him subservient to the honour and reputation of her and hers. A man of sense who is thus obliged, is ever contriving the happiness of her who did him so great a distinction; while the fool is ungrateful without vice, and never returns a favour because he is not sensible of it. I would, methinks, have so much to say for myself, that if I fell into the hands of him who treated me ill, he should be sensible when he did so: his conscience should be of my side whatever became of his inclination. I do not know but it is the insipid choice which has been made by those who have the care of young women, that the marriage state itself has been liable to so much ridicule. But a well-chosen love, moved by passion on both sides, and perfected by the generosity of one party, must be adorned with so many handsome incidents on the other side, that every particular couple would be an example in many circumstances to all the rest of the species. I shall end the chat upon this subject with a couple of letters, one from a lover who is very well acquainted with the way of bargaining on those occasions; and the other from his rival, who has a less estate, but great gallantry of temper. As for my man of prudence, he makes love, as he says, as if he were already a father, and laying aside the passion comes to the reason of the thing.

M A D A M,

‘MY counsel has perused the inventory of your ‘estate, and considered what estate you have,
‘which it seems is only yours, and to the male heirs ‘of your body; but in default of such issue, to the ‘right heirs of your uncle Edward for ever. Thus, ‘Madam, I am advised you cannot (the remainder ‘ not being in you) dock the entail; by which means ‘ my estate, which is fee simple, will come by the set‘ tlement proposed to your children begotten by me, ‘ whether they are males or females: but my children ‘ begotten upon you will not inherit your lands, ex‘ cept I beget a son. Now, Madam, since things are ‘ so, you are a woman of that prudence, and under‘ stand the world so well, as not to expect I should give ‘ you more than you can give me.

I am, MADAM,

With great respect,

Your most obedient humble servant,

T. W.

THE other lover's estate is less than this gentleman's, but he expressed himself as follows.

MADAM,

‘ I HAVE given in my estate to your counsel, and ‘ I desired my own lawyer to insist upon no terms ‘ which your friends can propose for your certain ease
‘ and advantage; for indeed I have no notion of mak‘ ing difficulties of presenting you with what cannot ‘ make me happy without you.

I am, MADAM,

Your most devoted humble servant,

B. T.

You must know the relations have met upon this, and the girl being mightily taken with the latter epistle, she is laughed at, and uncle Edward is to be dealt with to make her a suitable match to the worthy gentleman who has told her he does not care a farthing for her. All I hope for is, that the lady Fair will make use of the first light night to show B. T. she understands a marriage is not to be considered as a common bargain.

T

No. 523. Thursday, October 30.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

—————*Nunc augur Apollo,
Nunc Lyciæ sortes, nunc et Jove missus ab ipso Interpres divum fert horrida jussa per auras;
Scilicet is superis labor*—————

VIRG. ÆN. 4. v. 376.

*Now Lycian lots, and now the Delian God,
Now Hermes is employ'd from Jove's abode;
To warn him hence; as if the peaceful state
Of heavenly pow'rs were touch'd with human fate!*

DRYDEN.

I AM always highly delighted with the discovery of any rising genius among my countrymen. For this reason I have read over, with great pleasure, the late miscellany published by Mr Pope, in which there are many excellent compositions of that ingenious gentleman. I have had a pleasure of the same kind, in perusing a poem that is just published on the prospect of peace, and which, I hope, will meet with such a reward from its patrons, as so noble a performance deserves. I was particularly well pleased to find that the author had not amused himself with fables out of the Pagan theology, and that when he hints at any thing of this nature he alludes to it only as to a fable.

MANY of our modern authors, whose learning very often extends no farther than Ovid's Metamorphoses, do not know how to celebrate a great man, without mixing a parcel of school-boy tales with the recital of his actions. If you read a poem on a fine woman, among the authors of this class, you shall see it turns more upon Venus or Helen, than the party concerned. I have known a copy of verses on a great hero highly commended; but upon asking to hear some of the beautiful passages, the admirer of it has repeated to me a speech of Apollo, or a description of Polypheme. At other times when I have searched for the actions of a great man, who gave a subject to the writer, I have been entertained with the exploits of a river god, or been forced to attend a fury in her mischievous progress, from one end of the poem to the other. When we are at school it is necessary for us to be acquainted with the system of Pagan theology, and may be allowed to enliven a theme, or point an epigram with an heathen god; but when we would write a manly panegyric, that should carry in it all the colours of truth, nothing can be more ridiculous than to have recourse to our Jupiters and Junos.

No thought is beautiful which is not just, and no thought can be just which is not founded in truth, or at least in that which passes for such.

IN mock-heroic poems, the use of the heathen mythology is not only excusable but graceful, because it is the design of such compositions to divert, by adapting the fabulous machines of the ancients to low subjects, and at the same time by ridiculing such kinds of machinery in modern writers. If any are of opinion, that there is a necessity of admitting these classical legends into our serious compositions, in order to give them a more poetical turn; I would recommend to their consideration the pastorals of Mr Philips. One would have thought it impossible for this kind of poetry to have subsisted without fawns and satyrs, wood-nymphs and water-nymphs, with all the tribe of rural deities. But we see he has given a new life, and a more natural beauty to this way of writing, by substituting in the place of these antiquated fables, the superstitious mythology which prevails among the shepherds of our own country.

VIRGIL and Homer might compliment their heroes, by interweaving the actions of deities with their achievements; but for a Christian author to write in the Pagan creed, to make prince Eugene a favourite of Mars, or to carry on a correspondence between Bellona and the Marshal de Villars, would be downright puerility, and unpardonable in a poet that is past sixteen. It is want of sufficient elevation in a genius to describe realities, and place them in a shining light, that makes him have recourse to such trifling antiquated fables: as a man may write a fine description of Bacchus or Apollo, that does not know how to draw the character of any of his contemporaries.

IN order therefore to put a stop to this absurd practice, I shall publish the following edict, by virtue of that spectatorial authority with which I stand invested.

‘ WHEREAS the time of a general peace is, in all ‘ appearance, drawing near, being informed ‘ that there are several ingenious persons, who intend ‘ to shew their talents on so happy an occasion, and ‘ being willing, as much as in me lies, to prevent that ‘ effusion of nonsense, which we have good cause to ‘ apprehend; I do hereby strictly require every person, ‘ who shall write on this subject, to remember that he ‘ is a Christian, and not to sacrifice his catechism to his ‘ poetry. In order to it, I do expect of him in the ‘ first place, to make his own poem, without depend‘ ing upon Phoebus for any part of it, or calling out ‘ for aid upon any one of the Muses by name. I do ‘ likewise positively forbid the sending of Mercury with ‘ any particular message or dispatch relating to the ‘ peace, and shall by no means suffer Minerva to take ‘ upon her the shape of any plenipotentiary concern‘ ed in this great work. I do further declare, that I ‘ shall not allow the Destinies to have had any hand ‘ in the deaths of the several thousands who have been ‘ slain in the late war, being of opinion that all such ‘ deaths may be very well accounted for by the Chris‘ tian system of powder and ball. I do therefore strict‘ ly forbid the Fates to cut the thread of man’s life, ‘ upon any pretence whatsoever, unless it be for the ‘ sake of the rhyme. And whereas I have good rea‘ son to fear, that Neptune will have a great deal of ‘ business on his hands in the several poems which we ‘ may now suppose are upon the anvil, I do also pro‘ hibit his appearance, unless it be done in metaphor,

‘ simile, or any very short allusion, and that even here ‘ he be not permitted to enter but with great caution ‘ and circumspection. I desire that the same rule may ‘ be extended to his whole fraternity of heathen gods, ‘ it being my design to condemn every poem to the flames
 ‘ in which Jupiter thunders, or exercises any other act ‘ of authority which does not belong to him: in short, ‘ I expect that no Pagan agent shall be introduced, or ‘ any fact related which a man cannot give credit to ‘ with a good conscience. Provided always, that no‘ thing herein contained shall extend, or be construed ‘ to extend, to several of the female poets of this na‘ tion, who shall still be left in full possession of their ‘ gods and goddesses, in the same manner as if this pa‘ per had never been written: O

No 524. Friday, October 31.

[By Mr HUGHES.]

Nos populo damus—

SENECA.

As the world leads, we follow.

WHEN I first of all took it in my head to write dreams and visions, I determined to print nothing of that nature, which was not of my own invention. But several laborious dreamers have of late communicated to me works of this nature, which for their reputations and my own, I have hitherto suppressed. Had I printed every one that came to my hands, my book of speculations, would have been little else but a book of visions. Some of my correspondents have indeed been so very modest, as to offer at an excuse for their not being in a capacity to dream better. I have by me, for example, the dream of a young gentleman not past fifteen. I have likewise by me the dream of a person of quality, and another called the lady's dream. In these, and other pieces of the same nature, it is supposed the usual allowances will be made to the age, condition and sex of the dreamer. To prevent this inundation of dreams, which daily flows in upon me, I shall apply to all dreamers of dreams, the advice which Epictetus has couched, after his manner, in a very simple and concise precept: 'Never tell thy dreams, says that philosopher, for tho' thou thyself may'st take a pleasure in telling thy dream, another will take no pleasure in hearing it.' After this short preface, I must do justice to two or three visions which I have lately published, and which I have owned to have been written by other hands. I shall add a dream to these which comes to me from Scotland, by one who declares himself of that country, and for all I know may be second sighted. There is indeed, something in it of the spirit of John Bunyan; but at the same time a certain sublime, which that author was never master of. I shall publish it, because I question not but it will fall in with the taste of all my popular readers, and amuse the imagination of those who are more profound; declaring at the same time, that this is the last dream which I intend to publish this season.

S I R,

I WAS last Sunday in the evening led into a serious reflexion on the reasonableness of virtue, and great folly of vice, from an excellent sermon I had heard that afternoon in my parish-church. Among other observations, the preacher shewed us, that the temptations which the tempter proposed, were all on a supposition that we are either madmen or fools, or with an intention to render us such; that in no other affair we would suffer ourselves to be thus imposed upon, in a case so plainly and clearly against our visible interest. His illustrations and arguments carried so much persuasion and conviction with them that they remained a considerable while fresh; and working in my memory: 'till at last the mind, fatigued with thought, gave way to the forcible oppressions of slumber and sleep, whilst fancy, unwilling yet to ‘ drop the subject, presented me with the following ‘ vision.

‘ M E T H O U G H T I was just awoke out of a sleep, that ‘ I could never remember the beginning of; the place ‘ where I found myself to be, was a wide and spacious ‘ plain, full of people that wandered up and down ‘ through several beaten paths, whereof some few were ‘ straight and in direct lines, but most of them wind‘ ing and turning like a labyrinth; but yet it appeared ‘ to me afterwards, that these last all met in one ‘ issue, so that many that seemed to steer quite contra‘ ry courses, did at length meet and face one another, ‘ to the no little amazement of many of them.

‘ I N the midst of the plain there was a great foun‘ tain, they called it the spring of Self-love: out of it ‘ issued two rivulets to the eastward and westward; the ‘ name of the first was Heavenly-wisdom, its water ‘ was wonderfully clear, but of a yet more wonderful ‘ effect; the other’s name was Worldly-wisdom, its wa‘ ter was thick, and yet far from being dormant or ‘ stagnating, for it was in a continual violent agitati‘ on; which kept the travellers, whom I shall mention ‘ by and by, from being sensible of the foulness and ‘ thickness of the water; which had this effect, that ‘ it intoxicated those who drank it, and made them ‘ mistake every object that lay before them; both ri‘ vulets were parted near their springs into so many o‘ thers, as there were straight and crooked paths, which ‘ they attended all along to their respective issues.

‘ I O B S E R V E D from the several paths many now and ‘ then diverting, to refresh and otherwise qualify them‘ selves for their journey, to the respective rivulets that ‘ ran near them; they contracted a very observable ‘ courage and steadiness in what they were about, by ‘ drinking these waters. At the end of the perspec‘ tive of every straight path, all which did end in one ‘ issue and point, appeared a high pillar, all of dia‘ mond, casting rays as bright as those of the sun in‘ to the paths, which rays had also certain sympathizing and alluring virtues in them, so that whosoever had made some considerable progress in his journey onwards towards the pillar, by the repeated impression of these rays upon him, was wrought into an habitual inclination and conversion of his sight towards it, so that it grew at last in a manner natural to him to look and gaze upon it, whereby he was kept steady in the straight paths, which alone lead to that radiant body, the beholding of which was now grown a gratification to his nature.

At the issue of the crooked paths there was a great black tower, out of the centre of which streamed a long succession of flames, which did rise even above the clouds; it gave a very great light to the whole plain, which did sometimes outshine the light, and oppressed the beams of the adamantine pillar; though by the observation I made afterwards, it appeared that it was not for any diminution of light, but that this lay in the travellers who would sometimes step out of the straight paths, where they lost the full prospect of the radiant pillar and saw it but a side-ways: but the great light from the black tower, which was somewhat particularly scorching to them, would generally light and hasten them to their proper climate again.

Round about the black tower there were, methought, many thousands of huge misshapen ugly monsters; these had great nets, which they were perpetually plying and casting towards the crooked paths, and they would now and then catch up those that were nearest to them, these they took up straight, and whirled over the walls into the flaming tower, and they were no more seen nor heard of.

They would sometimes cast their nets towards the right paths to catch the stragglers, whose eyes for want of frequent drinking at the brook that ran by them grew dim, whereby they lost their way; these would sometimes very narrowly miss being caught away, but I could not hear whether any of these

‘ had ever been so unfortunate, that had been before ‘ very hearty in the straight paths.

‘ I CONSIDERED all these strange sights with great ‘ attention, till at last I was interrupted by a cluster of ‘ the travellers in the crooked paths, who came up to ‘ me, bid me go along with them, and presently fell to ‘ singing and dancing; they took me by the hand, and ‘ so carried me away along with them. After I had ‘ followed them a considerable while, I perceived I had ‘ lost the black tower of light, at which I greatly won‘ dered; but as I looked and gazed round about me, ‘ and saw nothing, I begun to fancy my first vision had ‘ been but a dream, and there was no such thing in ‘ reality: but then I considered that if I could fancy
‘ to see what was not, I might as well have an illusion ‘ wrought on me at present, and not see what was ‘ really before me. I was very much confirmed in ‘ this thought, by the effect I just then observed the ‘ water of Worldly-wisdom had upon me; for as I had ‘ drunk a little of it again, I felt a very sensible effect ‘ in my head; methought it distracted and disordered ‘ all there; this made me stop of a sudden suspecting ‘ some charm or enchantment. As I was casting about ‘ within myself what I should do, and whom to apply ‘ to in this case, I spy’d at some distance off me a man ‘ beckoning, and making signs to me to come over to ‘ him. I cryed to him, I did not know the way. He ‘ then called to me audibly, to step at least out of the ‘ path I was in; for if I stayed there any longer I was ‘ in danger to be caught in a great net that was just ‘ hanging over me, and ready to catch me up; that ‘ he wondered I was so blind, or so distracted, as not ‘ to see so imminent and visible a danger, assuring me, ‘ that as soon as I was out of that way he would come ‘ to me to lead me into a more secure path. This he ‘ did, and he brought me his palm full of the water ‘ of Heavenly-wisdom, which was of very great use to ‘ me, for my eyes were straight cleared, and I saw the ‘ great black tower just before me; but the great net

‘ which I spy’d so near me, cast me in such a terror, ‘ that I ran back as far as I could in one breath, with‘ out looking behind me: then my benefactor thus be‘ spoke me; you have made the wonderfulest escape ‘ in the world, the water you used to drink is of a be‘ witching nature, you would else have been mightily ‘ shocked at the deformities and meanness of the place; ‘ for beside the set of blind fools in whose company ‘ you was, you may now behold many others who are ‘ only bewitched after another no less dangerous man‘ ner. Look a little that way, there goes a croud of ‘ passengers, they have indeed so good a head as not ‘ to suffer themselves to be blinded by this bewitching ‘ water; the black tower is not vanished out of their ‘ sight, they see it whenever they look up to it, but see ‘ how they go side-ways, and with their eyes down‘ wards, as if they were mad, that they may thus rush ‘ into the net, without being before-hand troubled at ‘ the thought of so miserable a destruction. Their ‘ wills are so perverse, and their hearts so fond of the ‘ pleasures of the place, that rather than forego them ‘ they will run all hazard, and venture upon all the mi-‘ series and woes before them.

‘ SEE there that other company, tho’ they should ‘ drink none of the bewitching water; yet they take ‘ a course bewitching and deluding; see how they ‘ chuse the crookedest paths, whereby they have often ‘ the black tower behind them, and sometimes see the ‘ radiant column side ways, which gives them some weak ‘ glimpse of it. These fools content themselves with ‘ that, not knowing whether any other have any more ‘ of its influence and light than themselves: this road ‘ is called that of superstition or human invention;
‘ they grossly overlook that which the rules and laws ‘ of the place prescribe to them, and contrive some o‘ ther scheme and set of directions and prescriptions ‘ for themselves, which they hope will serve their turn.
‘ He shewed me many other kinds of fools, which put ‘ me quite out of humour with the place. At last he ‘ carried me to the right paths, where I found true ‘ and solid pleasure, which entertained me all the way ‘ till we came in cloſer fight of the pillar, where the ‘ ſatisfaction increaſed to that measure that my facul‘ ties were not able to contain it; in the ſtraining of ‘ them I was violently waked, not a little grieved at ‘ the vaniſhing of ſo pleaſing a dream.

Glaſgow, Sept. 29.

No. 525. Saturday, November 1.

[By Mr HUGHES.]

Ο δ' εἰς το σῶφρον ἐπ' ἀρετῇ τ' αἰγῶν ἐρῶς,

Ζηλωτὸς ἀνθρώποιςιν——

EURIP.

That love alone, which virtue's laws controul, Deserves reception in the human ſoul.

IT is my custom to take frequent opportunities of inquiring from time to time, what ſucceſs my ſpeculations meet with in the town. I am glad to find in particular, that my diſcourſes on marriage have been well received. A friend of mine gives me to underſtand, from Doctors Commons, that more licences have been taken out there of late than uſual. I am likewise informed of ſeveral pretty fellows, who have reſolved to commence heads of families by the firſt favourable opportunity: one of them writes me word, that he is ready to enter into the bonds of matrimony, provided I will give it under my hand (as I now do) that a man may ſhew his face in good company after he is married, and that he need not be aſhamed to treat a woman with kindneſs, who puts herſelf into his power for life.

I HAVE other letters on this ſubject, which ſay that I am attempting to make a revolution in the world of gallantry, and that the conſequences of it will be, that a great deal of the ſprightlieſt wit and ſatire of the laſt age will be loſt: that a baſhful fellow upon changing his condition, will be no longer puzzled how to stand the rallery of his facetious companions; that he need not own he married only to plunder an heiress of her fortune, nor pretend that he uses her ill, to avoid the ridiculous name of a fond husband.

INDEED if I may speak my opinion of great part of the writings which once prevailed among us, under the notion of humour, they are such as would tempt one to think there had been an association among the wits of those times to rally legitimacy out of our island. A state of wedlock was the common mark of all the adventurers in farce and comedy, as well as the essayers in lampoon and satire, to shoot at; and nothing was a more standing jest in all clubs of fashionable mirth, and gay conversation. It was determined among those airy critics, that the appellation a sober man should signify a spiritless fellow. And I am apt to think it was about the same time, that good-nature, a word so peculiarly elegant in our language, that some have affirmed it cannot well be expressed in any other, came first to be rendered suspicious, and in danger of being transferred from its original sense to so distant an idea as that of folly.

I MUST confess it has been my ambition, in the course of my writings, to restore, as well as I was able, the proper ideas of things. And as I have attempted this already on the subject of marriage, in several papers, I shall here add some farther observations which occur to me on the same head.

NOTHING seems to be thought by our fine gentlemen, so indispensable an ornament in fashionable life, as love. A Knight errant, says Don Quixote, without a mistress, is like a tree without leaves; and a man of mode among us, who has not some fair one to sigh for, might as well pretend to appear dressed without his periwig. We have lovers in prose innumerable. All our pretenders to rhyme are professed inamoratoes; and there is scarce a poet, good or bad, to be heard of, who has not some real or supposed Sacharissa to improve his vein.

IF love be any refinement, conjugal love must be certainly so in a much higher degree. There is no comparison between the frivolous affectation of attracting the eyes of women with whom you are only captivated by way of amusement, and of whom perhaps you know nothing more than their features, and a regular and uniform endeavour to make yourself valuable, both as a friend and lover, to one whom you have chosen to be the companion of your life. The first is the spring of a thousand fopperies, silly artifices, falsehoods, and perhaps barbarities; or at best arises no higher than to a kind of dancing-school breeding, to give the person a more sparkling air. The latter is the parent of substantial virtues and agreeable qualities, and cultivates the mind while it improves the behaviour. The passion of love to a mistress, even where it is most sincere, resembles too much the flame of a fever; that to a wife is like the vital heat.

I HAVE often thought, if the letters written by men of good nature to their wives, were to be compared with those written by men of gallantry to their mistresses, the former, notwithstanding any inequality of style, would appear to have the advantage. Friendship, tenderness and constancy, dressed in a simplicity of expression, recommend themselves by a more native elegance, than passionate raptures, extravagant encomiums, and slavish adoration. If we were admitted to search the cabinet of the beautiful Narcissa, among heaps of epistles from several admirers, which are there preserved with equal care, how few should we find but would make any one sick in the reading, except her who is flattered by them? But in how different a style must the wise Benevolus, who converses with that good sense and good-humour among all his friends, write to a wife who is the worthy object of his utmost affection? Benevolus, both in public and private, and all occasions of life, appears to have every good quality and desirable ornament. Abroad he is revered and esteemed; at home beloved and happy. The satisfaction he enjoys there, settles into an habitual complacency, which shines in his countenance, enlivens his wit, and seasons his conversation: even those of his acquaintance, who have never seen him in his retirement, are sharers in the happiness of it; and it is very much owing to his being the best and best-beloved of husbands, that he is the most steadfast of friends and the most agreeable of companions.

THERE is a sensible pleasure in contemplating such beautiful instances of domestic life. The happiness of the conjugal state appears heightened to the highest degree it is capable of, when we see two persons of accomplished minds not only united in the same interests and affections, but in their taste of the same improvements, pleasures and diversions. Pliny, one of the finest gentlemen, and politest writers of the age in which he lived, has left us, in his letter to Hispulla, his wife's aunt, one of the most agreeable family-pieces of this kind I ever met with. I shall end this discourse with a translation of it; and I believe the reader will be of my opinion, that conjugal love is drawn in it with a delicacy which makes it appear to be, as I have represented it, an ornament as well as a virtue.

PLINY to HISPULLA.

AS I remember the great affection which was between you and your excellent brother, and know you love his daughter as your own, so as not only to express the tenderness of the best of aunts, but even to supply that of the best of fathers; I am sure it will be a pleasure to you to hear that she proves worthy of her father, worthy of you, and of your and her ancestors. Her ingenuity is admirable; her frugality extraordinary. She loves me, the surest pledge of her virtue; and adds to this a wonderful disposition to learning, which she has ac'quired from her affection to me. She reads my writings,

 'ings, studies them, and even gets them by heart.
 'You'd smile to see the concern she is in when I have 'a cause to plead, and the joy she shews when it is over.
 'ver. She finds means to have the first news brought 'her of the success I have met with in court, how I 'am heard, and what decree is made. If I recite any 'thing in public, she cannot refrain from placing herself
 'self privately in some corner to hear, where, with 'the utmost delight, she feasts upon my applauses.
 'Sometimes she sings my verses, and accompanies them 'with the lute, without any master, except love, the 'best of instructors. From these instances I take the most 'certain omens of our perpetual and increasing happiness;
 'since her affection is not founded upon my youth and person,
 'which must gradually decay, but she is in love with the 'immortal part of me, my glory and reputation. Nor indeed
 'could less be expected from one who had the happiness to 'receive her education from you, who in your house was 'accustomed to every thing that is virtuous and decent, and 'even began to love me by your recommendation. For,
 'as you had always the greatest respect for my mother,
 'you were pleased from my infancy to form me, to commend
 'me, and kindly to presage I should be one day what my 'wife fancies I am. Accept therefore our united thanks;
 'mine that you have bestowed her on me, and hers, that 'you have given me to her, as a mutual grant of joy and
 'felicity.

No. 526. Monday, November 3.

—Fortius utere loris. OVID. Met. l. 2. v. 127.

Keep a stiff rein.

ADDISON.

I AM very loth to come to extremities with the young gentlemen mentioned in the following letter, and do not care to chastise them with my own hand, till I am forced by provocations too great to be suffered without the absolute destruction of my spectatorial dignity. The crimes of these offenders are placed under the observation of one of my chief officers, who is posted just at the entrance of the pass between London and Westminster. As I have great confidence in the capacity, resolution and integrity of the person deputed by me to give an account of enormities, I doubt not but I shall soon have before me all proper notices which are requisite for the amendment of manners in public, and the instruction of each individual of the human species in what is due from him, in respect to the whole body of mankind. The present paper shall consist only of the above-mentioned letter, and the copy of a deputation which I have given to my trusty friend Mr John Sly; wherein he is charged to notify to me all that is necessary for my animadversion upon the delinquents mentioned by my correspondent, as well as all others described in the said deputation.

To the SPECTATOR GENERAL of Great-Britain.

I grant it does look a little familiar, but I must call you

Dear Dumb,

‘ B E I N G got again to the further end of the wi‘ dow’s coffeehouse, I shall from hence give you ‘ some account of the behaviour of our hackney‘ coachmen since my last. These indefatigable gen‘ tlemen, without the least design, I dare say, of self-‘ interest, or advantage to themselves, do still ply as ‘ volunteers day and night for the good of their ‘ country. I will not trouble you with enume‘ rating many particulars, but I must by no means ‘ omit to inform you of an infant about six feet high, ‘ and between twenty and thirty years of age, who ‘ was seen in the arms of a hackney-coachman driv‘ ing by Will’s coffeehouse in Covent-Garden, between ‘ the hours of four and five in the afternoon of that ‘ very day, wherein you published a memorial against ‘ them. This impudent young cur, though he could ‘ not fit in a coach-box without holding, yet would ‘ he venture his neck to bid defiance to your Spectato-‘ rial authority, or to any thing that you countenan‘ ced. Who he was I know not, but I heard this ‘ relation this morning from a gentleman who was an ‘ eye-witness of this his impudence; and I was willing ‘ to take the first opportunity to inform you of him, ‘ as holding it extremely requisite that you should nip ‘ him in the bud. But I am myself most concerned for ‘ my fellow-templars, fellow-students, and fellow-la‘ bourers in the law, I mean such of them as are dig‘ nified and distinguished under the denomination of ‘ hackney-coachmen. Such aspiring minds have these ‘ ambitious young men, that they cannot enjoy them‘ selves out of a coach box. It is however an unspeak-‘ able comfort to me, that I can now tell you, that ‘ some of them are grown so bashful as to study only ‘ in the night-time, or in the country. The other ‘ night I spied one of our young gentlemen very dili‘ gent at his lucubrations in Fleet-street; and by the ‘ way, I should be under some concern, lest this hard ‘ student should one time or other crack his brains

‘ with studying, but that I am in hopes nature has ta‘ ken care to fortify him in proportion to the great ‘ undertakings he was designed for. Another of my ‘ fellow-templars, on Thursday last, was getting up ‘ into his study at the bottom of Gray’s-Inn-Lane, in ‘ order, I suppose, to contemplate in the fresh air.
‘ Now, Sir, my request is, that the great modesty of ‘ these two gentlemen may be recorded as a pattern ‘ to the rest; and if you would but give them two or ‘ three touches with your pen, though you might not ‘ perhaps prevail with them to desist entirely from ‘ their meditations, yet I doubt not but you would ‘ at least preserve them from being public spectacles of ‘ folly in our streets. I say, two or three touches with ‘ your own pen; for I have really observed, Mr SPEC, ‘ that those Spectators which are so prettily laced

' down the sides with little c's, how instructive soever
 ' they may be, do not carry with them that authori' ty as the others. I do again therefore desire, that,
 ' for the sake of their dear necks, you would bestow
 ' one penful of your own ink upon them. I know you are
 ' loth to expose them; and it is, I must confess, a thou' sand pities that any young gentleman, who is come
 ' of honest parents, should be brought to public shame:
 ' and indeed I should be glad to have them handled a ' little tenderly at first; but if fair means will not pre' vail, there is then no other way to reclaim them,
 ' but by making use of some wholesome severities; and ' I think it is better a dozen or two of such good-for-' nothing fellows should be made examples of, than ' that the reputation of some hundreds of as hopeful
 ' young gentlemen as myself should suffer through ' their folly. It is not, however, for me to direct you
 ' what to do; but, in short, if our coachmen will ' drive on this trade, the very first of them that I do
 ' find meditating in the street, I shall make bold to ' take the number of his chambers, together with a ' note of his name, and dispatch them to you, that you
 ' may chastise him at your own discretion.

I am, dear Spec, for ever yours,

MOSES GREENBAG, Esq; if you please.

' P. S. Tom Hammercloth, one of our coachmen,
 ' is now pleading at the bar at the other end of the ' room, but has a little too much vehemence, and throws
 ' out his arms too much to take his audience with a
 ' good grace.

To my loving and well-beloved John Sly, haberdasher of hats, and tobacconist, between the cities of London and Westminster.

WHEREAS frequent disorders, affronts, indignities, omissions, and trespasses, for which there are no remedies by any form of law, but which apparently disturb and disquiet the minds of men, happen near the place of your residence; and that you are, as well by your commodious situation as the good parts with which you are endowed, properly qualified for the observation of the said offences: I do hereby authorise and depute you, from the hours of nine in the morning, till four in the afternoon, to keep a strict eye upon all persons and things that are conveyed in coaches, carried in carts, or walk on foot from the city of London to the city of Westminster, or from the city of Westminster to the city of London, within the said hours. You are therefore not to depart from your observatory at the end of Devereux court during the said space of each day; but to observe the behaviour of all persons who are suddenly transported from stamping on pebbles to sit at ease in chariots, what notice they take of their foot acquaintance, and send me the speediest advice, when they are guilty of overlooking, turning from, or appearing grave and distant to their old friends. When man and wife are in the same coach, you are to see whether they appear pleased or tired with each other, and whether they carry the due mean in the eye of the world between fondness and coldness. You are carefully to behold all such as shall have addition of honour or riches, and report whether they preserve the countenance they had before such addition. As to persons on foot, you are to be attentive whether they are pleased with their conditions, and are dressed suitable to it; but especially to distinguish such as appear discreet by a low-heel shoe, with the decent ornament of a leather garter: to write down the names of such country gentlemen as, upon the approach of peace, have left the hunting for the military cock of the hat: of all who strut, make a noise, and swear at the drivers of coaches to make haste, when they see it impossible they should pass: of all young gentlemen in coach-boxes, who labour at a perfection in what they are sure to be excelled by the meanest of the people. You are to do all that in you lies that coaches and passengers give way according to the course of business, all the morning in term-time towards Westminster, the rest of the year towards the Exchange. Upon these directions, together with other secret articles herein inclosed, you are to govern yourself, and give advertisement thereof to me at all convenient and spectatorial hours, when men of business are to be seen. Hereof you are not to fail. Given under my seal of office.

T

The SPECTATOR.

XX

No. 527 Tuesday, November 4.

Facile invenies et pejorem, et pejus moratam:

Meliorē neque tu reperies, neque sol videt.

Plautus in Sticho.

You will easily find a worse woman; a better the sun never shone upon.

I AM so tender of my women readers, that I cannot defer the publication of any thing which concerns their happiness or quiet. The repose of a married woman is consulted in the first of the following letters, and the felicity of a maiden lady in the second. I call it a felicity to have the addresses of an agreeable man; and I think I have not any where seen a prettier application of a poetical story than that of his, in making the tale of Cephalus and Procris the history picture of a fan in so gallant a manner as he addresses it. But see the letters.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ TIS now almost three months since I was in ‘ town about some business; and the hurry of ‘ it being over, took coach one afternoon, and drove ‘ to see a relation, who married about six years ago a ‘ wealthy citizen. I found her at home, but her hus‘ band gone to the Exchange, and expected back ‘ within an hour at the farthest. After the usual sa‘ lutations of kindness, and a hundred questions about

‘ friends in the country, we sat down to piquet, play‘ ed two or three games, and drank tea. I should ‘ have told you that this was my second time of see‘ ing her since her marriage: but before she lived at ‘ the same town where I went to school; so that the ‘ plea of a relation, added to the innocence of my ‘ youth, prevailed upon her good-humour to indulge ‘ me in a freedom of conversation as often and oftener, ‘ than the strict discipline of the school would allow of.
‘ You may easily imagine after such an acquaintance ‘ we might be exceeding merry without any offence, ‘ as in calling to mind how many inventions I have ‘ been put to, in deluding the master, how many ‘ hands forged for excuses, how many times been sick ‘ in perfect health; for I was then never sick but at ‘ school, and only then because out of her company.
‘ We had whiled away three hours after this manner, ‘ when I found it past five: and not expecting her ‘ husband would return ’till late, rose up, told her I ‘ should go early next morning for the country: she ‘ kindly answered she was afraid it would be long ‘ before she saw me again; and so I took my leave ‘ and parted. Now Sir, I had not been got home a ‘ fortnight, when I received a letter from a neighbour ‘ of theirs, that ever since that fatal afternoon the la‘ dy had been most inhumanely treated, and the hus‘ band publickly storned that he was made a mem‘ ber of too numerous a society. He had, it seems, list-‘ ned most of the time my cousin and I were together.
‘ As jealous ears always hear double, so he heard e‘ nough to make him mad; and as jealous eyes see ‘ thro’ magnifying glasses, so he was certain it could ‘ not be I whom he had seen, a beardless stripling, but ‘ fancied he saw a gay gentleman of the temple, ten ‘ years older than myself; and for that reason, I pre‘ sume, durst not come in, nor take any notice when I ‘ went out. He is perpetually asking his wife if she ‘ does not think the time long (as she said she should) ‘ till she see her cousin again. Pray, Sir, what can ‘ be done in this case? I have writ to him to assure ‘ him I was at his house all that afternoon expecting ‘ to see him: his answer is, ’tis only a trick of hers, ‘ and that he neither can nor will believe me. The ‘ parting kifs I find mightily nettles him, and con‘ firms him in all his errors. Ben Johnson, as I re‘ member, makes a foreigner in one of his comedies, ‘ admire the desperate valour of the bold English, who ‘ let out their wives, to all encounters. The general ‘ custom of salutation should excuse the favour done ‘ me, or you should lay down rules when such distincti‘ ons are to be given or omitted. You cannot ima‘ gine, Sir, how troubled I am for this unhappy lady’s ‘ misfortune, and beg you would insert this letter, ‘ that the husband may reflect upon this accident cool‘ ly. It is no small matter, the case of a virtuous wo‘ man for her whole life: I know she will conform to ‘ any regularities (though more strict than the common ‘ rules of our country require) to which his particu‘ lar temper shall incline him to oblige her. This ac‘ cident puts me in mind how generously Pisistratus

‘ the Athenian tyrant behaved himself on a like occa‘ sion, when he was instigated by his wife to put to ‘ death a young gentleman, because being passionate‘ ly fond of his daughter, he kissed her in public as he ‘ met her in the street; What, says he, shall we do to ‘ those who are our enemies, if we do thus to those who ‘ are our friends? I will not trouble you much lon‘ ger, but am exceedingly concerned lest this accident ‘ may cause a virtuous lady to lead a miserable life ‘ with a husband, who has no grounds for his jealousy ‘ but what I have faithfully related, and ought to be ‘ reckoned none. ’Tis to be feared too, if at last he ‘ sees his mistake, yet people will be as slow and un‘ willing in disbelieving scandal, as they are forward ‘ and quick in believing it. I shall endeavour to en‘ liven this plain and honest letter with Ovid’s relati‘ on about Cybele’s image. The ship wherein it was ‘ aboard was stranded at the mouth of the Tyber, and ‘ the men were unable to move it, ’till Claudia, a vir‘ gin, but suspected of unchastity, by a slight pull haw-‘ led it in. The story is told in the fourth book of the ‘ Fasti.

Parent of gods, began the weeping fair,
 Reward or punish, but oh! hear my pray’r,
 If lewdness e’er defil’d my virgin bloom,
 From heaven with justice I receive my doom;
 But if my honour yet has known no stain,
 Thou, goddess, thou my innocence maintain;
 Thou, whom the nicest rules of goodness sway’d,
 Vouchsafe to follow an unblemish’d maid.
 She spoke, and touch’d the cord, with glad surprise,
 (The truth was witness’d by ten thousand eyes)
 The pitying goddess easily comply’d,
 Follow’d in triumph, and adorn’d her guide;
 While Claudia, blushing still for past disgrace,
 March’d silent on with a slow solemn pace:
 Nor yet from some was all distrust remov’d,
 Tho’ heav’n such virtue by such wonders prov’d.

I am, Sir, Your most humble servant, PHILAGNOTES.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ YOU will oblige a languishing lover, if you will ‘ please to print the inclosed verses in your next ‘ paper. If you remember the Metamorphoses, you ‘ know Procris, the fond wife of Cephalus, is said to ‘ have made her husband, who delighted in the sports ‘ of the wood, a present of an unerring javelin. In ‘ process of time he was so much in the forest, that his ‘ lady suspected he was pursuing some nymph, under ‘ the pretence of following a chace more innocent.
 ‘ Under this suspicion she hid herself among the trees,
 ‘ to observe his motions. While she lay concealed, ‘ her husband, tired with the labours of hunting, came ‘ within her hearing. As he was fainting with heat, ‘ he cried out, Aura veni; Oh charming air approach.
 ‘ THE unfortunate wife, taking the word Air to be the ‘ name of a woman, began to move among the bushes;

 ‘ and the husband believing it a deer, threw his jave‘ lin and killed her. This history painted on a fan, ‘ which I presented to a lady, gave occasion to my ‘ growing poetical.

Come gentle air! th’ Æolian shepherd said,
 While Procris panted in the secret shade;
 Come gentle air! the fairer Delia cries,
 While at her feet her swain expiring lies.
 Lo the glad gales o’er all her beauties stray,
 Breathe on her lips, and in her bosom play.
 In Delia’s hand this toy is fatal found,
 Nor did that fabled dart more surely wound.
 Both gifts destructive to the givers prove,
 Alike both lovers fall by those they love:
 Yet guiltless too this bright destroyer lives,
 At random wounds, nor knows the wound she gives.
 She views the story with attentive eyes,
 And pities Procris, while her lover dies.

No 528.

Wednesday, November 5.

Dum potuit, solita gemitum virtute repressit.

Ovid. Met. l. 9. v. 163.

With wonted fortitude she bore the smart,

And not a groan confess’d her burning heart. GAY.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ I WHO now write to you, am a woman loaded ‘ with injuries, and the aggravation of my misfor‘ tune is, that they are such which are overlooked by ‘ the generality of mankind, and tho’ the most afflict‘ ing imaginable, not regarded as such in the gene‘ ral sense of the world. I have hid my vexation from ‘ all mankind; but have now taken pen, ink, and pa‘ per, and am resolved to unbosom myself to you, ‘ and lay before you what grieves me and all the sex.
 ‘ You have very often mentioned particular hardships done to this or that lady ; but, methinks, you have not in any one speculation directly pointed at the partial freedom men take, the unreasonable confinement women are obliged to, in the only circumstance in which we are necessarily to have a commerce with them, that of love. The case of celibacy is the great evil of our nation ; and the indulgence of the vicious conduct of men in that state, with the ridicule to which women are exposed, tho' ever so virtuous, if long unmarried, is the root of the greatest irregularities of this nation. To shew you, Sir, that though you never have given us the catalogue of a lady's library as you promised, we read good books of our own chusing, I shall insert on this occasion a paragraph or two out of Echard's Roman history. In the 44th page of the second volume the author observes, that Augustus, upon his return to Rome at the end of a war, received complaints that too great a number of the young men of quality were unmarried. The emperor thereupon assembled the whole Equestrian order ; and having separated the married from the single, did particular honours to the former, but he told the latter, that is to say, Mr SPECTATOR, he told the batchelors, That their lives and actions had been so peculiar, that he knew not by what name to call them ; not by that of men, for they performed nothing that was manly ; not by that of citizens, for the city might perish notwithstanding their care ; nor by that of Romans, for they designed to extirpate the Roman name.' Then proceeding to shew his tender care and hearty affection for his people, he further told them, ' That their course of life was of such pernicious consequence to the glory and grandeur of the Roman nation, that he could not chuse but tell them, that all other crimes put together could not equalize theirs : for they were guilty of murder, in not suffering those to be born which should proceed from them ; of impiety, in causing the names and honours of their ancest“ ors to cease ; and of sacrilege, in destroying their “ kind, which proceeded from the immortal gods, and “ human nature, the principal thing consecrated to “ them : therefore in this respect they dissolved the go“ vernment, in disobeying its laws; betrayed their “ country by making it barren and waste; nay and “ demolished their city, in depriving it of inhabitants.

“ And he was sensible that all this proceeded not from “ any kind of virtue or abstinence, but from a looseness “ and wantonness, which ought never to be encoura“ ged in any civil government.’ There are no par“ ticulars dwelt upon that let us into the conduct of “ these young worthies, whom this great emperor trea“ ted with so much justice and indignation; but any “ one who observes what passes in this town, may very “ well frame to himself a notion of their riots and de“ baucheries all night, and their apparent preparati“ ons for them all day. It is not to be doubted but these “ Romans never passed any of their time innocently but “ when they were asleep, and never slept but when “ they were weary and heavy with excesses, and slept “ only to prepare themselves for the repetition of them.
“ If you did your duty as a SPECTATOR, you would care“ fully examine into the number of births, marriages, “ and burials; and when you had deducted out of your “ deaths all such as went out of the world without marry“ ing, then cast up the number of both sexes born within “ such a term of years last past, you might from the “ single people departed make some useful inferences “ or guesses how many there are left unmarried, and “ raise some useful scheme for the amendment of the “ age in that particular. I have not patience to pro“ ceed gravely on this abominable libertinism; for I “ cannot but reflect, as I am writing to you, upon a “ certain lascivious manner which all our young gen“ tlemen use in public, and examine our eyes with a “ petulancy in their own, which is a downright affront “ to modesty. A disdainful look on such an occasion “ is returned with a countenance rebuked, but by a-

verting their eyes from the woman of honour and decency to some flippant creature, who will, as the phrase is, be kinder. I must set down things as they come into my head, without standing upon order. Ten thousand to one but the gay gentleman who stared, at the same time is an house keeper; for you must know they have got into a humour of late of being very regular in their sins, and a young fellow shall keep his four maids and three footmen with the greatest gravity imaginable. There are no less than six of these venerable housekeepers of my acquaintance. This humour among young men of condition is imitated by all the world below them, and a general dissolution of manners arises from this one source of libertinism, without shame or reprehension in the male youth. It is from this one fountain that so many beautiful helpless young women are sacrificed and given up to lewdness, shame, poverty and disease. It is to this also that so many excellent young women, who might be patterns of conjugal affection, and parents of a worthy race, pine under unhappy passions for such as have not attention enough to observe, or virtue enough to prefer them to their common wenches. Now, Mr SPECTATOR, I must be free to own to you, that I myself suffer a tasteless insipid being, from a consideration I have for a man who would not, as he has said in my hearing, resign his liberty, as he calls it, for all the beauty and wealth the whole sex is possessed of. Such calamities as these would not happen, if it could possibly be brought about, that by fining batchelors as papists convict, or the like, they were distinguished to their disadvantage from the rest of the world, who fall in with the measures of civil societies. Lest you should think I speak this as being, according to the senseless rude phrase, a malicious old maid, I shall acquaint you I am a woman of condition not now three and twenty, and have had proposals from at least ten different men, and the greater number of them have upon the up-

‘shot refused me. Something or other is always amiss ‘when the lover takes to some new wench : a settle‘ment is easily excepted against ; and there is very lit‘tle recourse to avoid the vicious part of our youth, ‘but throwing one’s self away upon some lifeless block-‘head, who, tho’ he is without vice, is also without ‘virtue. Now-a-days we must be contented if we can ‘get creatures which are not bad, good are not to be ‘expected. Mr SPECTATOR, I sat near you the other ‘day, and I think did not displease your Spectatorial ‘eye-sight : which I shall be a better judge of when I ‘see whether you take notice of these evils your own ‘way, or print this memorial dictated from the dis‘dainful heavy heart of,

SIR, Your most obedient humble servant,

T

RACHEL WELLADAY.

No. 529. Thursday, November 6.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Singula quæque locum teneant sortita decenter.

HOR. Ars. poet. v. 92.

Then let your style be suited to the scene,

And its peculiar character maintain. FRANCIS.

UPON the hearing of several late disputes concerning rank and precedence, I could not forbear amusing myself with some observations, which I have made upon the learned world, as to this great particular. By the learned world I here mean, at large, all those who are any ways concerned in works of literature, whether in the writing, printing, or repeating part. To begin with the writers ; I have observed that the author of a Folio, in all companies and conversations, sets himself above the author of a Quarto : the author of a Quarto above the author of an Octavo ; and so on, by a gradual descent, and subordination, to an author in Twenty-fours. This distinction is so well observed, that in an assembly of the learned, I have seen a Folio writer place himself in an elbow-chair, when the author of a Duodecimo has, out of a just deference to his superior quality, seated himself upon a squab. In a word, authors are usually ranged in company after the same manner as their works are upon a shelf.

THE most minute pocket-author hath beneath him the writers of all pamphlets, or works that are only stitched.

As for the pamphleteer, he takes place of none but of the authors of single sheets, and of that fraternity who publish their labours on certain days, or on every day of the week. I do not find that the precedence among the individuals, in this latter class of writers, is yet settled.

FOR my own part, I have had so strict a regard to the ceremonial which prevails in the learned world, that I never presumed to take place of a pamphleteer, 'till my daily papers were gathered into those two first volumes, which have already appeared. After which, I naturally jumped over the heads not only of all pamphleteers, but of every Octavo writer in Great Britain, that had written but one book. I am also informed by my bookseller, that six Octavos have at all times been looked upon as an equivalent to a Folio, which I take notice of the rather, because I would not have the learned world surpris'd, if after the publication of half a dozen volumes I take my place accordingly. When my scattered forces are thus rallied, and reduced into regular bodies, I flatter myself that I shall make no despicable figure at the head of them.

WHETHER these rules, which have been received time out of mind in the commonwealth of letters, were not originally established with an eye to our paper manufacture, I shall leave to the discussion of others, and shall only remark further in this place, that all printers and booksellers take the wall of one another, according to the abovementioned merits of the authors to whom they respectively belong.

I COME now to that point of precedency which is settled among the three learned professions, by the wisdom of our laws. I need not here take notice of the rank which is allotted to every doctor in each of these professions, who are all of them, though not so high as knights, yet a degree above squires; this last order of men being the illiterate body of the nation, are consequently thrown together into a class below the three learned professions. I mention this for the sake of several rural squires, whose reading does not rise so high as to the present state of England, and who are often apt to usurp that precedency which by the laws of their country is not due to them. Their want of learning, which has planted them in this station, may in some measure extenuate their misdemeanour; and our professors ought to pardon them when they offend in this particular, considering that they are in a state of ignorance, or, as we usually say, do not know their right hand from their left.

THERE is another tribe of persons who are retainers to the learned world, and who regulate themselves upon all occasions by several laws peculiar to their body. I mean the players or actors of both sexes. Among these it is a standing uncontroverted principle, that a tragedian always takes place of a comedian; and it is very well known the merry drolls who make us laugh are always placed at the lower end of the table, and in every entertainment give way to the dignity of the buskin. It is a stage maxim, Once a king, and always a king. For this reason it would be thought very absurd in Mr Bullock, notwithstanding the height and gracefulness of his person, to sit at the right hand of a hero, tho' he were but five feet high. The same distinction is observed among the ladies of the theatre. Queens and heroines preserve their rank in private conversation, while those who are waiting-women and maids of honour upon the stage, keep their distance also behind the scenes.

I SHALL only add, that by a parity of reasons, all writers of tragedy look upon it as their due to be seated, served, or saluted before comic writers. those who deal in tragi-comedy usually taking their seats between the authors of either side. There has been a long dispute for precedency between the tragic and heroic poets. Aristotle would have the latter yield the Pas to the former; but Mr Dryden and many others would not submit to this decision. Burlesque writers pay the same deference to the heroic, as comic writers to their serious brothers in the drama,

By this short table of laws, order is kept up, and distinctions preserved in the whole republic of letters. ○

No. 530. Friday, November 7.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Sic visum Veneri; cui placet impares

Formas atque animos sub juga aenea

Savo mittere cum joco. HOR. Od. 33. l. 1. v. 10.

So Venus wills, whose power controuls

The fond affections of our souls;

With sportive cruelty she binds

Unequal forms, unequal minds.

FRANCIS.

IT is very usual for those who have been severe upon marriage, in some part or other of their lives to enter into the fraternity which they have ridiculed, and to see their rallery return upon their own heads. I scarce ever knew a woman-hater that did not sooner or later pay for it. Marriage, which is a blessing to another man, falls upon such a one as a judgment. Mr Congreve's Old Batchelor is set forth to us with much wit and humour, as an example of this kind. In short, those who have most distinguished themselves by railing at the sex in general, very often make an honourable amends, by chusing one of the most worthless persons of it, for a companion and yoke-fellow. Hymen takes his revenge in kind, on those who turn his mysteries into ridicule.

MY friend WILL HONEYCOMB, who was so unmercifully witty upon the women, in a couple of letters, which I lately communicated to the public, has given the ladies ample satisfaction, by marrying a farmer's daughter; a piece of news which came to our club by the last post. The Templar is very positive that he has married a dairy-maid: but Will, in his letter to me on this occasion, sets the best face upon the matter that he can, and gives a more tolerable account of his spouse. I must confess I suspected something more than ordinary, when upon opening the letter I found that WILL was fallen off from his former gaiety, having changed Dear SPEC, which was his usual salute at the beginning of the letter, into My worthy friend, and subscribed himself at the latter end of it at full length WILLIAM HONEYCOMB. In short, the gay, the loud, the vain WILL HONEYCOMB, who had made love to every great fortune that has appeared in town for above thirty years together, and boasted of favours from ladies whom he had never seen, is at length wedded to a plain country girl.

His letter gives us the picture of a converted rake. The sober character of the husband is dashed with the man of the town, and enlivened with those little cant phrases which have made my friend WILL often thought very pretty company. But let us hear what he says for himself.

My worthy friend,

I QUESTION not but you, and the rest of my acquaintance, wonder that I, who have lived in the smoke and gallantries of the town for thirty years together, should all on a sudden grow fond of a country life. Had not my dog of a steward run away as he did, without making up his accounts, I had still been immersed in sin and sea-coal. But since my late forced visit to my estate, I am so pleased with it, that I am resolved to live and die upon it. I am every day abroad among my acres, and can scarce forbear filling my letter with breezes, shades, flowers, ‘ meadows, and purling streams. The simplicity of ‘ manners which I have heard you so often speak of,

‘ and which appears here in perfection, charms me ‘ wonderfully. As an instance of it, I must acquaint ‘ you, and by your means the whole club, that I have ‘ lately married one of my tenant’s daughters. She ‘ is born of honest parents, and though she has no por‘ tion, she has a great deal of virtue. The natural ‘ sweetness and innocence of her behaviour, the fresh‘ ness of her complexion, the unaffected turn of her ‘ shape and person, shot me through and through eve‘ ry time I saw her, and did more execution upon me ‘ in grogram, than the greatest beauty in town or ‘ court had ever done in brocade. In short, she is such ‘ a one as promises me a good heir to my estate, and ‘ if by her means I cannot leave to my children what ‘ are falsely called the gifts of birth, high titles and al‘ liances, I hope to convey to them the more real and ‘ valuable gifts of birth, strong bodies, and healthy ‘ constitutions. As for your fine women, I need not ‘ tell thee that I know them. I have had my share in ‘ their graces, but no more of that. It shall be my ‘ business hereafter to live the life of an honest man,
‘ and to act as becomes the master of a family. I ques‘ tion not but I shall draw upon me the gallery of the ‘ town, and be treated to the tune of The Marriage- ‘ hater match’d; but I am prepared for it. I have ‘ been as witty upon others in my time. To tell thee ‘ truly, I saw such a tribe of fashionable young fluttering ‘ coxcombs shot up, that I did not think my post of an ‘ homme de ruelle any longer tenable. I felt a certain ‘ stiffness in my limbs, which entirely destroyed that ‘ jauntiness of air I was once master of. Besides, for I ‘ may now confess my age to thee, I have been eight ‘ and forty above these twelve years. Since my re‘ tirement into the country will make a vacancy in the ‘ club, I could wish you would fill up my place with ‘ my friend Tom Dapperwit. He has an infinite deal ‘ of fire, and knows the town. For my own part, as ‘ I have said before, I shall endeavour to live hereafter ‘ suitable to a man in my station, as a prudent head ‘ of a family, a good husband, a careful father (when ‘ it shall so happen) and as

O

Your most sincere friend, and humble servant,

WILLIAM HONEYCOMB.

No. 531. Saturday, November 8.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Qui mare et terras variisque mundum

Temperat horis :

Unde nil majus generatur ipso,

Nec viget quicquam simile aut secundum.

HOR. Od. 12. l. 1. v. 15.

Awful who reigns o'er Gods and men supreme,

Who sea and earth and universal globe

With grateful change of seasons rules ;

From whom no being of superior power,

Nothing of equal, second glory springs. FRANCIS.

SIMONIDES being asked by Dionysius the tyrant, What God was ? desired a day's time to consider of it before he made his reply. When the day was expired, he desired two days ; and afterwards, instead of returning his answer, demanded still double time to consider of it. This great poet and philosopher, the more he contemplated the nature of the Deity, found that he waded but the more out of his depth ; and that he lost himself in the thought, instead of finding an end of it.

IF we consider the idea which wise men, by the light of reason, have framed of the Divine Being, it amounts to this : That he has in him all the perfection of a spiritual nature ; and since we have no notion of any kind of spiritual perfection but what we discover in our own souls, we join infinitude to each kind of these perfections, and what is a faculty in a human soul becomes an attribute in God. We exist in place and time, the Divine Being fills the immensity of space with his presence, and inhabits eternity. We are possessed of a little power and a little knowledge, the Divine Being is Almighty and omniscient. In short, by adding infinity to any kind of perfection we enjoy, and by joining all these different kinds of perfections in one being, we form our idea of the great Sovereign of nature.

THOUGH every one who thinks must have made this observation, I shall produce Mr Locke's authority to the same purpose, out of his Essay on human understanding. 'If we examine the idea we have of the incomprehensible Supreme Being, we shall find, that we come by it the same way; and that the complex ideas we have both of God and separate spirits, are made up of the simple ideas we receive from reflexion: v. g. having from what we experiment in ourselves, got the ideas of existence and duration, of knowledge and power, of pleasure and happiness, and of several other qualities and powers, which it is better to have than to be without; when we would frame an idea the most suitable we can to the Supreme Being, we enlarge every one of these with our idea of infinity; and so putting them together, make our complex idea of God.'

It is not impossible that there may be many kinds of spiritual perfection, besides those which are lodged in an human soul; but it is impossible that we should have ideas of any kinds of perfection, except those of which we have some small rays and short imperfect strokes in ourselves. It would be therefore a very high presumption to determine whether the Supreme Being has not many more attributes than those which enter into our conceptions of him. This is certain, that if there be any kind of spiritual perfection which is not marked out in an human soul, it belongs in its fulness to the Divine Nature.

SEVERAL eminent philosophers have imagined that the soul, in her separate state, may have new faculties springing up in her, which she is not capable of exerting during her present union with the body; and whether these faculties may not correspond with other attributes in the divine nature, and open to us hereafter new matter of wonder and adoration, we are altogether ignorant. This, as I have said before, we ought to acquiesce in, that the Sovereign Being, the great Author of nature, has in him all possible perfection, as well in kind as in degree; to speak according to our methods of conceiving. I shall only add under this head, that when we have raised our notion of this infinite Being as high as it is possible for the mind of man to go, it will fall infinitely short of what he really is. There is no end of his greatness; the most exalted creature he has made, is only capable of adoring it, none but himself can comprehend it.

XLIII. 28. THE advice of the son of Sirach is very just and sublime in this light. By his word all things consist. We may speak much, and yet come short; wherefore in sum, he is all. How shall we be able to magnify him? for he is great above all his works. The Lord is terrible and very great; and marvellous in his power. When you glorify the Lord, exalt him as much as you can: for even yet will he far exceed. And when you exalt him, put forth all your strength, and be not weary; for you can never go far enough. Who hath seen him, that he might tell us? and who can magnify him as he is? There are yet hid greater things than these be, for we have seen but a few of his works.

I HAVE here only considered the Supreme Being by the light of reason and philosophy. If we would see him in all the wonders of his mercy we must have recourse to revelation, which represents him to us, not only as infinitely great and glorious, but as infinitely good and just in his dispensations towards man. But as this is a theory which falls under every one's consideration, tho' indeed it can never be sufficiently considered, I shall here only take notice of that habitual worship and veneration which we ought to pay to this Almighty Being. We should often refresh our minds with the thought of him, and annihilate ourselves before him, in the contemplation of our own worthlessness and of his transcendent excellency and perfection. This would imprint in our minds such a constant and uninterrupted awe and veneration as that which I am here recommending, and which is in reality a kind of incessant prayer, and reasonable humiliation of the soul before him who made it.

THIS would effectually kill in us all the little seeds of pride, vanity, and self-conceit, which are apt to shoot up in the minds of such whose thoughts turn more on those comparative advantages which they enjoy over some of their fellow-creatures, than on that infinite distance which is placed between them and the supreme model of all perfection. It would likewise quicken our desires and endeavours of uniting ourselves to him by all the acts of religion and virtue.

SUCH an habitual homage to the Supreme Being would, in a particular manner, banish from among us that prevailing impiety of using his name on the most trivial occasions.

I FIND the following passage in an excellent sermon, preached at the funeral of a gentleman who was an honour to his country, and a more diligent as well as successful inquirer into the works of nature, than any other our nation has ever produced: 'He had the profoundest veneration for the great God of heaven and earth that I have ever observed in any person. The very name of God was never mentioned by him without a pause and a visible stop in his discourse; in which, one that knew him most particularly above twenty years, has told me, that he was so exact, that he does not remember to have observed him once to fail in it.'

EVERY one knows the veneration which was paid by the Jews to a name so great, wonderful and holy.

They would not let it enter even into their religious discourses. What can we then think of those who make use of so tremendous a name in the ordinary expressions of their anger, mirth, and most impertinent passions! of those who admit it into the most familiar questions and assertions, ludicrous phrases and works of humour; not to mention those who violate it by solemn perjuries. It would be an affront to reason to endeavour to set forth the horror and profaneness of such a practice. The very mention of it exposes it sufficiently to those in whom the light of nature, not to say religion, is not utterly extinguished. O

No. 532. Monday, November 10.

—Fungor vice cotis, acutum

Reddere quæ ferrum valet, exors ipsa secandi.

HOR. Ars poet. v. 304.

—Let me sharpen others, as the hone

Gives edge to razors, though itself has none. FRANCIS.

IT is a very honest action to be studious to produce other men's merit: and I make no scruple of saying I have as much of this temper as any man in the world. It would not be a thing to be bragged of, but that it is what any man may be master of who will take pains enough for it. Much observation of the unworthiness in being pained at the excellence of another, will bring you to a scorn of yourself for that unwillingness: and when you have got so far, you will find it a greater pleasure than you ever before knew, to be zealous in promoting the fame and welfare of the praise-worthy. I do not speak this as pretending to be a mortified self-denying man, but as one who has turned his ambition into a right channel. I claim to myself the merit of having extorted excellent productions from a person of the greatest abilities, who would not have let them appear by any other means; to have animated a few young gentlemen into worthy pursuits, who will be a glory to our age; and at all times, and by all possible means in my power, undermined the interests of ignorance, vice, and folly, and attempted to substitute in their stead learning, piety, and good sense. It is from this honest heart that I find myself honoured as a gentleman usher to the arts and sciences. Mr Tickle and Mr Pope have, it seems, this idea of me. The former has writ me an excellent paper of verses in praise, forsooth, of myself; and the other inclosed for my perusal an admirable poem, which, I hope, will shortly see the light. In the mean time I cannot suppress any thought of his, but insert his sentiment about the dying words of Adrian. I won't determine in the case he mentions; but have thus much to say in favour of his argument, that many of his own works which I have seen, convince me that very pretty and very sublime sentiments may be lodged in the same bosom, without diminution to its greatness.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ I WAS the other day in company with five or six ‘ men of some learning; where chancing to mention ‘ on the famous verses which the emperor Adrian spoke ‘ on his death-bed, they were all agreed that it was a ‘ piece of gaiety unworthy that prince in those circumstances.
 ‘ I could not but dissent from this opinion:
 ‘ methinks it was by no means a gay, but a very serious ‘ soliloquy to his soul at the point of its departure: in ‘ which sense I naturally took the verses at my first ‘ reading them when I was very young, and before I ‘ knew what interpretation the world generally put ‘ upon them:

“ Animula vagula, blandula, “ Hospes comesque corporis, “ Quæ nunc abibis in loca?
 “ Pallidula, rigida, nudula,
 “ Nec (ut soles) dabis jocos!”

“ Alas, my soul! thou pleasing companion of this body, “ thou fleeting thing that art now deserting it! whither “ art thou flying? to what unknown region?

“ thou art all trembling, fearful, and pensive. Now “ what is become of thy former wit and humour?
 “ Thou shalt jest and be gay no more.’ I confess I ‘ cannot apprehend where lies the trifling in all this;
 ‘ ’tis the most natural and obvious reflexion imagina‘ ble to a dying man: and if we consider the emperor ‘ was a heathen, that doubt concerning the future state ‘ of his soul will seem so far from being the effect of ‘ want of thought, that it is scarce reasonable he should ‘ think otherwise; not to mention that here is a plain ‘ confession included of his belief in its immortality.
 ‘ The diminutive epithets of vagula, blandula, and the ‘ rest, appear not to me as expressions of levity, but ‘ rather of indearment and concern; such as we find ‘ in Catullus, and the authors of Hendeca-syllabi af‘ ter him, where they are used to express the utmost ‘ love and tenderness for their mistresses.—If you ‘ think me right in my notion of the last words of A‘ drian, be pleased to insert this in the Spectator; if ‘ not, to suppress it. I am, &c.

To the supposed author of the SPECTATOR.

I N courts licentious, and a shameless stage,
 How long the war shall wit with virtue wage?
 Incharmed by this prostituted fair,
 Our youth run headlong in the fatal snare;
 In height of rapture clasp unheeded pains,
 And suck pollution through their tingling veins.

THY spotless thoughts unshock’d the priest may hear,
 And the pure vestal in her bosom wear.
 To conscious blushes and diminish’d pride,
 Thy glass betrays what treach’rous love would hide;
 Nor harsh thy precepts, but infus’d by stealth,
 Please while they cure, and cheat us into health.
 Thy works in Chloe’s toilet gain a part,
 And with his taylor share the toppling’s heart:
 Lash’d in thy satire, the penurious cit
 Laughs at himself, and finds no harm it wit;
 From felon gamesters the raw squire is free,
 And Britain owes her rescu’d oaks to thee.
 His miss the frolic viscount dreads to toast,
 Or his third cure the shallow templar boast;
 And the rash fool who scorn’d the beaten road,

Dares quake at thunder, and confess his God.

THE brainless stripling, who, expell'd the town,
Damn'd the stiff college, and pedantic gown,
Aw'd by thy name, is dumb, and thrice a-week
Spells uncouth Latin, and pretends to Greek.
A fauntring tribe! such born to wide estates,
With yea and no in senates hold debates:
At length despis'd, each to his field retires,
First with the dogs, and king amidst the squires;
From pert to stupid sinks supinely down,
In youth a coxcomb, and in age a clown.

SUCH readers scorn'd, thou wing'st thy darling flight Above the stars, and tread'st the fields of light;
Fame, heav'n and hell, are thy exalted theme,
And visions such as Jove himself might dream;
Man sunk to slavery, though to glory born,
Heav'n's pride when upright, and deprav'd his scorn.

SUCH hints alone could British Virgil lend,
And thou alone deserve from such a friend:
A debt so borrow'd, is illustrious shame,
And fame when shar'd with him is double fame:
So flush'd with sweets, by beauty's queen bestow'd,
With more than mortal charms Æneas glow'd.
Such gen'rous strifes Eugene and Marlbro' try,
And as in glory so in friendship vie.

PERMIT these lines by thee to live nor blame
A muse that pants and languishes for fame;
That fears to sink when humbler themes she sings,
Lost in the mass of mean forgotten things,
Receiv'd by thee, I prophecy, my rhimes,
The praise of virgins in succeeding times:
Mix'd with thy works, their life no bounds shall see,
But stand protected, as inspir'd, by thee.

So some weak shoot, which else would poorly rise,
Jove's tree adopts, and lifts him to the skies;
Through the new pupil fostering juices flow,
Thrust forth the gems, and give the flow'rs to blow Aloft: immortal reigns the plant unknown,
With borrow'd life, and vigour not his own.

To the SPECTATOR-GENERAL.

Mr John Sly humbly sheweth,

THAT upon reading the deputation given to the said Mr John Sly, all persons passing by his observatory behaved themselves with the same decorum, as if your honour yourself had been present.

THAT your said officer is preparing, according to your honour's secret instructions, hats for the several kinds of heads that make figures in the realms of Great Britain, with cocks significant of their powers and faculties.

THAT your said officer has taken due notice of your instructions and admonitions concerning the internals of the head from the outward form of the same. His hats for men of the faculties of law and physic do but just turn up, to give a little life to their sagacity; his military hats glare full in the face; and he has prepared a familiar easy cock for all good companions between the above mentioned extremes. For this end he has consulted the most learned of his acquaintance for the true form and dimensions of the lepidum caput, and made a hat fit for it.

YOUR said officer does further represent that the young divines about town are many of them got into the cock military, and desires your instructions therein.

THAT the town has been for several days very well behaved, and further your said officer saith not. T

No. 533. Tuesday, November 11.

Immo duas dabo, inquit ille, una si parum est;

Et si duarum pœnitebit, addentur duæ. PLAUT.

Nay, says he, if one is too little, I will give you two; and if two won't satisfy you, I will add two more.

To the SPECTATOR.

S I R,

‘ YOU have often given us very excellent discourses against that unnatural custom of parents, in forcing their children to marry contrary to their inclinations. My own case, without farther preface, I will lay before you, and leave you to judge of it. My father and mother both being in declining years, would fain see me, their eldest son, as they call it, settled. I am as much for that as they can be; but I must be settled, it seems, not according to my own, but their liking. Upon this account, I am teized every day, because I have not yet fallen in love, in spite of nature, with one of a neighbouring gentleman's daughters; for out of their abundant generosity, they give me the choice of four. Jack, begins my father, Mrs Catharine is a fine woman——Yes,

‘ Sir, but she is rather too old—She will make the more ‘ discreet manager, boy. Then my mother plays her ‘ part. Is not Mrs Betty exceeding fair? Yes, Madam, ‘ but she is of no conversation; she has no fire, no agree‘ able vivacity; she neither speaks nor looks with spirit.
‘ True, son; but for those very reasons, she will be ‘ an easy, soft, obliging, tractable creature. After all, ‘ cries an old aunt, (who belongs to the class of those ‘ who read plays with spectacles on) what think you, ‘ nephew, of proper Mrs Dorothy? What do I think?
‘ why, I think she cannot be above six foot two inches ‘ high. Well, well, you may banter as long as you ‘ please, but height of stature is commanding and ma‘ jestic. Come, come, says a cousin of mine in the fa‘ mily, I’ll fit him; Fidelia is yet behind—Pretty Miss ‘ Fiddy must please you—Oh! your very humble ‘ servant, dear coz, she is as much too young as her ‘ eldest sister is too old. Is it so indeed, quoth she, ‘ good Mr Pert? you who are but barely turned of ‘ twenty two, and Miss Fiddy in half a year’s time ‘ will be in her teens, and she is capable of learning ‘ any thing. Then she will be so observant; she’ll ‘ cry perhaps now and then, but never be angry. Thus ‘ they will think for me in this matter, wherein I am ‘ more particularly concerned than any body else. If ‘ I name any woman in the world, one of these daugh‘ ters has certainly the same qualities. You see by ‘ these few hints, Mr SPECTATOR, what a comforta‘ ble life I lead. To be still more open and free with ‘ you, I have been passionately fond of a young lady ‘ (whom give me leave to call Miranda) now for these ‘ three years. I have often urged the matter home to ‘ my parents, with all the submission of a son, but the ‘ impatience of a lover. Pray, Sir, think of three years:
‘ what inexpressible scenes of inquietude, what varie‘ ty of misery must I have gone thro’ in three long ‘ whole years? Miranda’s fortune is equal to those I ‘ have mentioned; but her relations are not intimates

‘ with mine. Ah! there’s the rub. Miranda’s per‘ son, wit, and humour, are what the nicest fancy could ‘ imagine; and though we know you to be so elegant ‘ a judge of beauty, yet there is none among all your ‘ various characters of fine women preferable to Mi‘ randa. In a word, she is never guilty of doing any ‘ thing but one amiss, (if she can be thought to do a‘ miss by me) in being as blind to my faults, as she is ‘ to her own perfections.

I am, Sir, Your most obedient humble servant.

DUSERASTUS.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ WHEN you spent so much time as you did late‘ ly in censuring the ambitious young gentle‘ men who ride in triumph through town and coun‘ try in coach boxes, I wished you had employed those ‘ moments in consideration of what passes sometimes ‘ within side of those vehicles. I am sure I suffered ‘ sufficiently by the insolence and ill-breeding of some ‘ persons who lately travelled with me in a stage-coach ‘ out of Essex to London. I am sure, when you have ‘ heard what I have to say, you will think there are ‘ persons under the character of gentlemen that are fit ‘ to be no where else but in the coach-box. Sir, I am ‘ a young woman of a sober and religious education,
 ‘ and have preserved that character; but on Monday ‘ was fortnight it was my misfortune to come to Lon‘ don. I was no sooner clapt in the coach, but to my ‘ great surprize, two persons in the habit of gentlemen ‘ attacked me with such indecent discourse as I cannot ‘ repeat to you, so you may conclude not fit for me to ‘ hear. I had no relief but the hopes of the speedy ‘ end of my short journey. Sir, form to yourself what ‘ a persecution this must needs be to a virtuous and ‘ chaste mind; and in order to your proper handling ‘ such a subject, fancy your wife or daughter, if you ‘ had any, in such circumstances, and what treatment ‘ you would then think due to such dragoons. One ‘ of them was called a captain, and entertained us with ‘ nothing but silly stupid questions, or lewd songs, all ‘ the way. Ready to burst with shame and indigna‘ tion, I repined that nature had not allowed us as ea‘ sily to shut our ears as our eyes. But was not this a ‘ kind of rape? Why should there be accessaries in ra-‘ vishment any more than murder? Why should not ‘ every contributor to the abuse of chastity suffer death?

‘ I am sure these shameless hell-hounds deserved it ‘ highly. Can you exert yourself better than on such ‘ an occasion? If you do not do it effectually, I’ll read ‘ no more of your papers. Has every impertinent fel‘ low a privilege to torment me, who pay my coach-‘ hire as well as he? Sir, pray consider us in this re‘ spect as the weakest sex, and have nothing to defend ‘ ourselves: and I think it is as gentleman-like to ‘ challenge a woman to fight, as to talk obscenely in ‘ her company, especially when she has not power to ‘ stir. Pray let me tell a story, which you can make ‘ fit for public view. I knew a gentleman, who hav‘ ing a very good opinion of the gentlemen of the ar‘ my invited ten or twelve of them to sup with him; ‘ and at the same time invited two or three friends, who ‘ were very severe against the manners and morals of ‘ gentlemen of that profession. It happened one of ‘ them brought two captains of his regiment newly come ‘ into the army, who at first onset engaged the com‘ pany with very lewd healths and suitable discourse.
‘ You may easily imagine the confusion of the enter‘ tainer, who finding some of his friends very uneasy, ‘ desired to tell them a story of a great man, one Mr ‘ Locke, (whom I find you frequently mention), that ‘ being invited to dine with the then lords Halifax, ‘ Anglesey, and Shaftsbury, immediately after din‘ ner, instead of conversation, the cards were called for,
‘ where the good or bad success produced the usual pas‘ sions of gaming. Mr Locke retiring to a window, ‘ and writing, my lord Angelsey desired to know what ‘ he was writing: “ Why, my lords (answered he) I “ could not sleep last night for the pleasure and im“provement I expected from the conversation of the “greatest men of the age.” This so sensibly stung them, “that they gladly compounded to throw their cards “into the fire, if he would his paper, and so a con“versation ensued fit for such persons. This story prest “so hard upon the young captains, together with the con“currence of their superior officers, that the young fel“lows left the company in confusion. Sir, I know you “hate long things; but if you like it, you may contract “it, or how you will; but I think it has a moral in it.

“BUT, Sir, I am told you are a famous mechanic, as “well as a looker-on, and therefore humbly propose “you would invent some padlock, with full power un“der your hand and seal, for all modest persons, either “men or women, to clap upon the mouths of all such “impertinent impudent fellows: and I wish you would “publish a proclamation, that no modest person that “has a value for her countenance, and consequently “would not be put out of it, presume to travel after “such a day without one of them in their pockets. I “fancy a smart SPECTATOR upon this subject, would “serve for such a padlock; and that public notice may “be given in your paper where they may be had with “directions, price 2 d; and that part of the directions “may be, when any person presumes to be guilty of “the above-mentioned crime, the party aggrieved may “produce it to his face, with a request to read it to “the company. He must be very much hardened that “could out face that rebuke; and his further punish“ment I leave you to prescribe. Your humble servant,

T

PENANCE CRUEL.

No 534. Wednesday, November 12.

Rarus enim ferme sensus communis in illa

Fortuna——

JUV. sat. 8. v. 73.

——— We seldom find

Much sense with an exalted fortune join'd. STEPNEY.

Mr SPECTATOR,

“I AM a young woman of nineteen, the only daugh“ter of very wealthy parents; and have my whole

• life been used with a tendernefs that did me no great
• fervice in my education. I have perhaps an uncom• mon defire for knowledge of what is fuitable to my • fex and quality; but as far as I can remember, the • whole difpute about me has been, whether fuch a • thing was proper for the child to do, or not? or • whether fuch or fuch a food was the more whole-• fome for the young lady to eat? This was ill for • my fhape, that for my complexion, and t'other for • my eyes. I am not extravagant when I tell you, I • do not know that I have trod upon the very earth
• ever fince I was ten years old; a coach or chair I • am obliged to for all my motions from one place to • another, ever fince I can remember. All who had to • do to inſtruct me, have ever been bringing ſtories of
• the notable things I have faid, and the womanly man• ner of my behaving myfelf upon fuch and fuch an • occaſion. This has been my ſtate till I came to years
• of womanhood; and ever fince I grew towards the • age of fifteen, I have been abuſed after another man• ner. Now, forſooth, I am ſo killing no one can ſafe-• ly ſpeak to me. Our houſe is frequented by men of • ſenſe, and I love to aſk queſtions when I fall into • ſuch converſation; but I am cut ſhort with ſome-
• thing or other about my bright eyes. There is, Sir,
• a language particular for talking to women in; and • none but thoſe of the very firſt good breeding (who • are very few, and who ſeldom come into my way)
• can ſpeak to us without regard to our ſex. Among
• the generality of thoſe they call gentlemen, it is im-
• poſſible for me to ſpeak upon any ſubject whatſoever
• without provoking ſomebody to ſay, Oh! to be ſure
• fine Mrs Such-a-one muſt be very particularly acquain- • ted with all that: all the world will contribute to
• her entertainment and information. Thus, Sir, I am ſo
• handſome, that I murder all who approach me; ſo
• wiſe, that I want no new notice; and ſo well-bred,
• that I am treated by all that know me like a fool,
• for no one will answer as if I were their friend and companion. Pray, Sir, be pleased to take the part of us beauties and fortunes into your consideration, and do not let us be thus flattered out of our senses.

 I have got an hussy of a maid, who is most craftily given to this ill quality. I was at first diverted with a certain absurdity the creature was guilty of in every thing she said; she is a country girl, and in the dialect of the shire she was born in, would tell me that every body reckoned her lady had the purest red and white in the world: then she would tell me, I was the most like one Sisly Dobson in their town, who made the miller make away with himself, and walk afterwards in the corn field where they used to meet.
 With all this, this cunning hussy can lay letters in my way, and put a billet in my gloves, and then stand to it she knows nothing of it. I do not know, from my birth to this day, that I have been ever treated by any one as I ought, and if it were not for a few books which I delight in, I should be at this hour a novice to all common sense. Would it not be worth your while to lay down rules for behaviour in this case, and tell people, that we fair ones expect honest plain answers as well as other people?
 Why must I, good Sir, because I have a good air, a fine complexion, and am in the bloom of my years, be misled in all my actions; and have the notions of good and ill confounded in my mind, for no other offence, but because I have the advantages of beauty and fortune? Indeed, Sir, what with the silly homage which is paid to us by the sort of people I have above spoken of, and the utter negligence which others have for us, the conversation of us young women of condition is no other than what must expose us to ignorance and vanity, if not vice. All this is humbly submitted to your Spectatorial wisdom, by,

Sir, your humble servant, CHARLOT WEALTHY.

Mr SPECTATOR,

Will's coffeehouse.

PRAY, Sir, it will serve to fill up a paper, if you put in this; which is only to ask, Whether that ‘ copy of verses, which is a paraphrase of Isaiah, in one ‘ of your speculations, is not written by Mr Pope?

 ‘ Then you get on another line, by putting in, with ‘ proper distances, as at the end of a letter,

I am, Sir, your humble servant,

ABRAHAM DAPPERWIT.

Mr DAPPERWIT,

‘ I AM glad to get another line forward, by saying ‘ that excellent piece is Mr Pope’s; and so with pro‘ per distances, I am, Sir, your humble servant,

The SPECTATOR.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ I WAS a wealthy grocer in this city, and as fortu‘ nate as diligent; but I was a single man, and ‘ you know there are women. One in particular came ‘ to my shop, who I wished might, but was afraid ne‘ ver would, make a grocer’s wife. I thought, howe‘ ver, to take an effectual way of courting, and sold her ‘ at less price than I bought, that I might buy at less ‘ price than I sold. She, you may be sure, often came,
 ‘ and helped me to many customers at the same rate, ‘ fancying I was obliged to her. You must needs think ‘ this was a good living trade, and my riches must be ‘ vastly improved. In fine, I was nigh being declared ‘ bankrupt, when I declared myself her lover, and she ‘ herself married. I was just in a condition to support ‘ myself, and am now in hopes of growing rich by lo‘ sing my customers.

Yours,

JEREMY COMFIT.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ I AM in the condition of the idol you was once plea‘ sed to mention, and bar-keeper of a coffeehouse.
 ‘ I believe it is needless to tell you the opportunities I ‘ must give, and the importunities I must suffer. But ‘ there is one gentleman who besieges me as close as ‘ the French did Bouchain. His gravity makes him ‘ work cautious, and his regular approaches denote a ‘ good engineer. You need not doubt of his oratory, ‘ as he is a lawyer; and especially since he has had so ‘ little use of it at Westminster, he may spare the more ‘ for me.

‘ WHAT then can weak woman do? I am willing ‘ to surrender, but he would have it at discretion, and ‘ I with discretion. In the mean time whilst we par‘ ley, our several interests are neglected. As this siege ‘ grows stronger, my tea grows weaker; and while he ‘ pleads at my bar, none come to him for counsel but ‘ in forma pauperis. Dear Mr SPECTATOR, advise him ‘ not to insist upon hard articles, nor by his irregular ‘ desires contradict the well-meaning lines of his coun‘ tenance. If we were agreed, we might settle to some‘ thing, as soon as we could determine whether we should ‘ get most, by the law, at the coffeehouse, or at West‘ minster,

Your humble servant,

LUCINDA PARLEY.

A minute from Mr John Sly.

THE world is pretty regular for about forty rood east, and ten west of the observatory of the said Mr Sly; but he is credibly informed, that when they are got beyond the pass into the Strand; or those who move city ward are got within Temple bar, they are just as they were before. It is therefore humbly proposed, that moving centries may be appointed all the busy hours of the day between the Exchange and Westminster, and report what passes to your honour, or your subordinate officers from time to time.

Ordered, THAT Mr Sly name the said officers, provided he will answer for their principles and morals. T

No. 535. Thursday, November 13.

Spem longam refecet— HOR. Od. 11. l. 1. v. 7.

Cut short vain hope.

MY four hundred and seventy first speculation turned upon the subject of hope in general. I design this paper a speculation upon that vain and foolish hope, which is misemployed on temporal objects, and produces many sorrows and calamities in human life.

It is a precept several times inculcated by Horace, that we should not entertain an hope of any thing in life which lies at a great distance from us. The shortness and uncertainty of our time here makes such a kind of hope unreasonable and absurd. The grave lies unseen between us and the object which we reach after: where one man lives to enjoy the good he has in view, ten thousand are cut off in the pursuit of it.

It happens likewise unluckily, that one hope no sooner dies in us, but another rises up in its stead. We are apt to fancy that we shall be happy and satisfied if we possess ourselves of such and such particular enjoyments; but either by reason of their emptiness, or the natural inquietude of the mind, we have no sooner gained one point, but we extend our hopes to another. We still find new inviting scenes and landisks lying behind those which at a distance terminated our view.

THE natural consequences of such reflexions are these; that we should take care not to let our hopes run out into too great a length; that we should sufficiently weigh the objects of our hope, whether they be such as we may reasonably expect from them, what they propose in their fruition, and whether they are such as we are pretty sure of attaining, in case our life extend itself so far. If we hope for things which are at too great a distance from us, it is possible that we may be intercepted by death in our progress towards them. If we hope for things of which we have not thoroughly considered the value, our disappointment will be greater than our pleasure in the fruition of them. If we hope for what we are not likely to possess, we act and think in vain, and make life a greater dream and shadow than it really is.

MANY of the miseries and misfortunes of life proceed from our want of consideration in one or all of these particulars. They are the rocks on which the sanguine tribe of lovers daily split, and on which the bankrupt, the politician, the alchymist and projector are cast away in every age. Men of warm imaginations and towering thoughts are apt to overlook the goods of fortune which are near them, for something that glitters in the sight at a distance; to neglect solid and substantial happiness, for what is showy and superficial; and to contemn that good that lies within their reach, for that which they are not capable of attaining. Hope calculates its schemes for a long and durable life : presses forward to imaginary points of bliss, and grasps at impossibilities ; and consequently very often ensnares men into beggary, ruin, and dishonour.

WHAT I have here said, may serve as a moral to an Arabian fable, which I find translated into French by Monfieur Galland. The fable has in it such a wild, but natural simplicity, that I question not but my reader will be as much pleased with it as I have been, and that he will consider himself, if he reflects on the several amusements of hope, which have sometimes passed in his mind, as a near relation to the Persian glass-man.

ALNASCHAR, says the fable, was a very idle fellow, that never would set his hand to any business during his father's life. When his father died, he left him to the value of an hundred drachmas in Persian money. Alnaschar, in order to make the best of it, laid it out in glasses, bottles, and the finest earthen ware. These he piled up in a large open basket, and having made choice of a very little shop, placed the basket at his feet, and leaned his back upon the wall, in expectation of customers. As he sat in this posture with his eyes upon the basket, he fell into a most amusing train of thought, and was overheard by one of his neighbours, as he talked to himself in the following manner :
“ This basket, says he, cost me at the wholesale merchant's an hundred drachmas, which is all I have “ in the world. I shall quickly make two hundred “ of it, by selling it in retail. These two hundred “ drachmas will in a very little while rise to four hundred, which of course will amount in time to four “ thousand. Four thousand drachmas cannot fail of “ making eight thousand. As soon as by this means I “ am master of ten thousand, I will lay aside my trade “ of a glass-man, and turn jeweller. I shall then deal “ in diamonds, pearls, and all sorts of rich stones.
“ When I have got together as much wealth as I can “ well desire, I will make a purchase of the finest “ house I can find, with lands, slaves, eunuchs, and “ horses. I shall then begin to enjoy myself, and make “ a noise in the world. I will not, however, stop there, “ but still continue my traffic, till I have got together “ an hundred thousand drachmas. When I have “ thus made myself master of an hundred thousand “ drachmas, I shall naturally set myself on the foot of “ a prince, and will demand the Grand Visier's daughter “ in marriage, after having represented to that “ minister the information which I have received of “ the beauty, wit, discretion, and other high qualities “ which his daughter possesses. I will let him know “ at the same time, that it is my intention to make “ him a present of a thousand pieces of gold on our “ marriage night. As soon as I have married the “ Grand Visier's daughter, I'll buy her ten black eunuchs, “ the youngest and best that can be got for “ money. I must afterwards make my father-in-law “ a visit with a great train of equipage. And when “ I am placed at his right-hand, which he will do of “ course, if it be only to honour his daughter, I will “ give the thousand pieces of gold which I promised “ him, and afterwards to his great surprise, will present “ him another purse of the same value, with some “ short speech; as, Sir, you see I am a man of my “ word; I always give more than I promise.

“ WHEN I have brought the princess to my house, “ I shall take particular care to breed her in a due respect “ to me, before I give the reins to love and dalliance.
“ To this end I shall confine her to her own apartment, “ make her a short visit, and talk but little to her.
“ Her women will represent to me, that she is inconsolable “ by reason of my unkindness, and beg me with tears to “ caress her, and let her sit down by me; but I shall still “ remain inexorable, and will turn my back upon her “ all the first night. Her mother will then come and “ bring her daughter to me, as I am seated upon my sofa.
“ The daughter, with tears in her eyes, will fling herself “ at my feet, and beg of me to receive her into my favour: “ then will I, to imprint in her a thorough veneration for “ my person, draw up my legs and spurn her from me “ with my foot, in such a manner that she shall fall “ down several paces from the sofa.”

ALNASCHAR was entirely swallowed up in this chimerical vision, and could not forbear acting with his foot what he had in his thoughts: so that unluckily striking his basket of brittle ware, which was the foundation of all his grandeur, he kicked his glasses to a great distance from him into the street, and broke them into ten thousand pieces.

No 536. Friday, November 14.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

O! veræ Phrygiæ, neque enim Phryges!

VIRG. Æn. 9. v. 617.

O! less than women, in the shapes of men?

DRYDEN.

AS I was the other day standing in my bookseller's shop, a pretty young thing about eighteen years of age, slept out of her coach, and brushing by me, beck'ned the man of the shop to the further end of his counter, where she whispered something to him with an attentive look, and at the same time presented him with a letter: after which, pressing the end of her fan upon his hand, she delivered the remaining part of her message, and withdrew. I observed in the midst of her discourse, that she flushed, and cast an eye upon me over her shoulder, having been informed by my bookseller, that I was the man of the short face whom she had so often read of. Upon her passing by me, the pretty blooming creature smiled in my face, and dropt me a curtsy. She scarce gave me time to return her salute, before she quitted the shop with an easy shuffle, and stepped again into her coach, giving the footmen directions to drive where they were bid. Upon her departure, my bookseller gave me a letter superscribed, To the ingenious Spectator, which the young lady had desired him to deliver into my own hands, and to tell me that the speedy publication of it would not only oblige herself, but a whole tea-table of my friends. I opened it therefore, with a resolution to publish it, whatever it should contain, and am sure, if any of my male-readers will be so severely critical as not to like it, they would have been as well pleased with it as myself, had they seen the face of the pretty scribe,

Mr SPECTATOR,

London, Nov. 1712.

YOU are always ready to receive any useful hint or proposal, and such, I believe, you will think one that may put you in a way to employ the most idle part of the kingdom; I mean that part of mankind who are known by the name of the women's-men or beaus, &c. Mr SPECTATOR, you are sensible these pretty gentlemen are not made for any manly employments, and for want of business are often as much in the vapours as the ladies. Now what I propose is this, that since knotting is again in fashion, which has been found a very pretty amusement, that you would recommend it to these gentlemen as something that may make them useful to the ladies they admire:

 And, since 'tis not inconsistent with any game, or other diversion, for it may be done in the play-house, in their coaches, at the tea-table, and in short, in all places where they come for the sake of the ladies (except at church, be pleased to forbid it there to prevent mistakes) it will be easily complied with. 'Tis besides an employment that allows, as we see by the fair sex, of many graces, which will make the beaux more readily come into it; it shews a white hand and diamond ring to great advantage; it leaves the eyes at full liberty to be employed as before, as also the thoughts, and the tongue. In short, it seems in every respect so proper, that 'tis needless to urge it farther, by speaking of the satisfaction these male-knotters will find, when they see their work mixed up in a fringe, and worn by the fair lady for whom and with whom it was done. Truly, Mr SPECTA- TOR, I cannot but be pleased I have hit upon something that these gentlemen are capable of; for 'tis sad so considerable a part of the kingdom (I mean for numbers) should be of no manner of use. I shall not trouble you farther at this time, but only to say, that I am always your reader, and generally your admirer,

C. B.

P. S. 'THE sooner these fine gentlemen are set to work the better; there being at this time several fine fringes that only stay for more hands.

I SHALL, in the next place, present my reader with the description of a set of men who are common enough in the world, though I do not remember that I have yet taken notice of them, as they are drawn in the following letter.

Mr SPECTATOR,

SINCE you have lately, to so good purpose, enlarged upon conjugal love, it is to be hoped you'll discourage every practice that rather proceeds from a regard to interest, than to happiness. Now

‘ you cannot but observe, that most of our fine young ‘ ladies readily fall in with the direction of the graver ‘ sort, to retain in their service, by some small encour‘ agement, as great a number as they can of super‘ numerary and insignificant fellows, which they use ‘ like whifflers, and commonly call Shoeing-horns.
‘ These are never designed to know the length of the ‘ foot, but only, when a good offer comes, to whet and ‘ spur him up to the point. Nay, ’tis the opinion of ‘ that grave lady, Madam Matchwell, that ’tis abso‘ lutely convenient for every prudent family to have ‘ several of these implements about the house, to clap ‘ on as occasion serves, and that every spark ought to ‘ produce a certificate of his being a shoeing-horn, be‘ fore he be admitted as a shoe. A certain lady, whom ‘ I could name, if it was necessary, has at present more ‘ shoeing-horns of all sizes, countries, and colours, in ‘ her service, than ever she had new shoes in her life.
‘ I have known a woman make use of a shoeing-horn ‘ for several years, and finding him unsuccessful in ‘ that function, convert him at length into a shoe. I ‘ am mistaken, if your friend Mr WILLIAM HONEY- ‘ COMB was not a cast shoeing-horn before his late ‘ marriage. As for myself, I must frankly declare to ‘ you, that I have been an arrant shoeing-horn for a‘ bove these twenty years. I served my first mistress ‘ in that capacity above five of the number, before she ‘ was shod. I confess, though she had many who made ‘ their applications to her, I always thought myself
‘ the best shoe in her shop, and it was not till a month ‘ before her marriage that I discovered what I was.
‘ This had like to have broke my heart, and raised ‘ such suspicions in me, that I told the next I made ‘ love to, upon receiving some unkind usage from her,
‘ that I began to look upon myself as no more than her ‘ shoeing horn. Upon which, my dear, who was a co-‘ quette in her nature, told me, I was hypochondriacal, ‘ and that I might as well look upon myself to be an ‘ egg or a pipkin. But in a very short time after she ‘ gave me to know that I was not mistaken in myself.
‘ It would be tedious to recount to you the life of an ‘ unfortunate shoeing-horn, or I might entertain you ‘ with a very long and melancholy relation of my suf‘ ferings. Upon the whole, I think, Sir, it would very ‘ well become a man in your post, to determine in, what ‘ cases a woman may be allowed, with honour, to make ‘ use of a shoeing horn, as also to declare, whether a ‘ maid on this side five and twenty, or a widow who ‘ has not been three years in that state may be grant‘ ed such a privilege, with other difficulties which will ‘ naturally occur to you upon that subject. I am S I R, O With the most profound veneration, Yours, &c.

No, 537. Saturday, November 15.

[By Mr HUGHES.]

Τὸ μέν γὰρ γένος ἐσμεν. —

Arat.

For we are his offspring.

Acts 17. 28

To the SPECTATOR,

S I R,

‘ IT has been usual to remind persons of rank, on great ‘ occasions in life, of their race and quality, and to ‘ what expectations they were born; that by considering ‘ what is worthy of them, they may be withdrawn ‘ from mean pursuits, and encouraged to laudable un‘ dertakings. This is turning nobility into a principle of ‘ virtue, and making it productive of merit, as it is ‘ understood to have been originally a reward of it.

‘ It is for the like reason, I imagine, that you have ‘ in some of your speculations asserted to you readers ‘ the dignity of human nature. But you cannot be in‘ sensible that this is a controverted doctrine; there are ‘ authors who consider human nature in a very different ‘ view, and books of maxims have been written to shew
 ‘ the falsity of all human virtues. The reflexions which ‘ are made on this subject usually take some tincture ‘ from the tempers and characters of those that make ‘ them. Politicians can resolve the most shining actions ‘ among men into artifice and design; others, who are ‘ soured by discontent, repulses, or ill usage, are apt to ‘ mistake their spleen for philosophy; men of profligate ‘ lives, and such as find themselves incapable of rising ‘ to any distinction among their fellow-creatures, are for ‘ pulling down all appearances of merit, which seems ‘ to upbraid them; and satirists describe nothing but deformity. From all these hands we have such draughts of mankind as are represented in those burlesque pictures, which the Italians call Caricatura's; where the art consists in preserving, amidst distorted proportions and aggravated features, some distinguishing likeness of the person, but in such a manner as to transform the most agreeable beauty into the most odious monster.

It is very disingenuous to level the best of mankind with the worst, and for the faults of particulars to degrade the whole species. Such methods tend not only to remove a man's good opinion of others, but to destroy that reverence for himself, which is a great guard of innocence, and a spring of virtue.

It is true indeed that there are surprising mixtures of beauty and deformity, of wisdom and folly, virtue and vice, in the human make; such a disparity is found among numbers of the same kind, and every individual, in some instances, or at some times, is so unequal to himself, that man seems to be the most wavering and inconsistent being in the whole creation. So that the question in morality, concerning the dignity of our nature, may at first sight appear like some difficult questions in natural philosophy, in which the arguments on both sides seem to be of equal strength. But as I began with considering this point as it relates to action, I shall here borrow an admirable reflexion from Monsieur Pascal, which I think sets it in its proper light.

It is of dangerous consequence (says he) to represent to man how near he is to the level of beasts, without shewing him at the same time his greatness. It is likewise dangerous to let him see his greatness, without his meanness. It is more dangerous yet to leave him ignorant of either; but very beneficial that he should be made sensible of both. Whatever imperfections we may have in our nature, it is the business of religion and virtue to rectify them, as far as is consistent with our present state. In the mean time, it is no small encouragement to generous minds to consider that we shall put them all off with our mortality. That sublime manner of salutation with which the Jews approached their kings,

“ O king, live for ever!”

‘ may be addressed to the lowest and most despised mortal among us, under all the infirmities and distresses with which we see him surrounded. And whoever believes the immortality of the soul, will not need a better argument for the dignity of his nature, nor a stronger incitement to actions suitable to it.

‘ I AM naturally led by this reflexion to a subject I have already touched upon in a former letter, and cannot without pleasure call to mind the thoughts of Cicero to this purpose, in the close of his book concerning old age. Every one who is acquainted with his writings, will remember that the elder Cato is introduced in that discourse as the speaker, and Scipio and Lelius as his auditors. This venerable person is represented looking forward, as it were, from the verge of extreme old age into a future state, and rising into a contemplation on the unperishable part of his nature and its existence after death. I shall collect part of his discourse. And as you have formerly offered some arguments for the soul’s immortality, agreeable both to reason and the Christian doctrine, I believe your readers will not be displeased to see how the same great truth shines in the pomp of the Roman eloquence.

“ THIS, says Cato, is my firm persuasion, that since the human soul exerts itself with so great activity; since it has such a remembrance of the past, such a concern for the future; since it is enriched with so many arts, sciences and discoveries, it is impossible but the being which contains all these must be immortal.”

‘ THE elder Cyrus, just before his death, is represented by XENOPHON speaking after this manner. “ Think not, my dearest children, that when I depart from you I shall be no more; but remember, that my soul, even while I lived among you was invisible to you; yet by my actions you were sensible it existed in this body. Believe it therefore existing still, though

“ it be still unseen. How quickly would the honours “ of illustrious men perish after death, if their souls “ performed nothing to preserve their fame? For my “ own part, I never could think that the soul while in “ a mortal body, lives, but when departed out of it, “ dies; or that its consciousness is lost when it is dis“ charged out of an unconscious habitation. But “ when it is freed from all corporeal alliance, then it “ truly exists. Further, since the human frame is bro“ ken by death, tell us what becomes of its parts? It “ is visible whither the materials of other beings are “ translated, namely, to the source from whence they “ had their birth. The soul alone, neither present “ nor departed, is the object of our eyes.

“ Thus Cyrus. But to proceed. No one shall per“ suade me, Scipio, that your worthy father, or your “ grandfathers, Paulus and Africanus, or Africanus his “ father or uncle, or many other excellent men whom “ I need not name, performed so many actions to be “ remembered by posterity, without being sensible that “ futurity was their right. And, if I may be allowed “ an old man's privilege, to speak of myself, do you “ think I would have endured the fatigue of so many “ wearisome days and nights, both at home and a“ broad, if I imagined that the same boundary which “ is set to my life must terminate my glory? Were “ it not more desirable to have worn out my days in “ ease and tranquillity, free from labour and without “ emulation? But I know not how, my soul has always “ raised itself, and looked forward on futurity, in this “ view and expectation, that when it shall depart out “ of life, it shall then live for ever; and if this were “ not true that the mind is immortal, the souls of the “ most worthy would not, above all others, have the “ strongest impulse to glory.

“ WHAT besides this is the cause that the wisest “ men die with the greatest equanimity, the ignorant “ with the greatest concern? Does it not seem that “ those minds which have the most extensive views, “ foresee they are removing to a happier condition, “ which those of a narrower sight do not perceive? I,

“ for my part, am transported with the hope of see“ ing your ancestors, whom I have honoured and lov“ ed, and am earnestly desirous of meeting, not only “ those excellent persons whom I have known, but “ those too of whom I have heard and read, and of “ whom I myself have written; nor would I be detain“ ed from so pleasing a journey. O happy day, when “ I shall escape from this crowd, this heap of pollu“ tion, and be admitted to that divine assembly of exalt“ ed spirits! When I shall go not only to those great “ persons I have named, but to my Cato, my son, than “ whom a better man was never born, and whose func-“ ral rites I myself performed, whereas he ought ra“ ther to have attended mine. Yet has not his soul de-“ ferted me, but seeming to cast back a look on me, “ is gone before to those habitations to which it was “ sensible I should follow him. And tho’ I might ap“ pear to have born my loss with courage, I was not “ unaffected with it; but I comforted myself in the as“ surance that it would not be long before we should “ meet again, and be divorced no more.

I am, Sir, &c.

I question not but my reader will be very much pleased to hear that the gentleman who has obliged the world with the foregoing letter, and who was the author of the 210th speculation on the immortality of the soul, the 375th on virtue in distress, the 525th on conjugal love, and two or three other very fine ones among those which are not lettered at the end, will soon publish a noble poem, intitled An ode to the Creator of the world, occasioned by the fragments of Orpheus.

No 538.

Monday, November 17.

———UltraFinem tendere opus.

HOR. sat. 1. l. 2. v. 1.

To lanch beyond all bounds.

SURPRISE is so much the life of stories, that every one aims at it, who endeavours to please by telling them. Smooth delivery, an elegant choice of words, and a sweet arrangement, are all beautifying graces, but not the particulars in this point of conversation, which either long command the attention, or strike with the violence of a sudden passion, or occasion the burst of laughter which accompanies humour. I have fancied that the mind is in this case like a traveller who sees a fine seat in haste; he acknowledges the delightfulness of a walk set with regularity, but would be uneasy if he were obliged to pass it over, when the first view had let him into all its beauties from one end to the other.

HOWEVER, a knowledge of the success which stories will have when they are attended with a turn of surprise, as it has happily made the characters of some, so has it also been the ruin of the characters of others. There is a set of men who outrage truth, instead of affecting us with a manner in telling it; who overleap the line of probability, that they may seem to move out of the common road; and endeavour only to make their hearers stare, by imposing upon them with a kind of nonsense against the philosophy of nature, or such a heap of wonders told upon their own knowledge, as it is not likely one man should have ever met with.

I HAVE been led to his observation by a company into which I fell accidentally. The subject of antipa- thies was a proper field wherein such false surprises might expatiate, and there were those present who appeared very fond to shew it in its full extent of traditional history. Some of them, in a learned manner, offered to our consideration the miraculous powers which the effluvia of cheese have over bodies whose pores are disposed to receive them in a noxious manner; others gave an account of such who could indeed bear the sight of cheese, but not the taste; for which they brought a reason from the milk of their nurses. Others again discoursed, without endeavouring at reasons, concerning the unconquerable aversion which some stomachs have against a joint of meat when it is whole, and the eager inclination they have for it, when, by its being cut up, the shape which had affected them is altered. From hence they passed to eels, then to parsnips, and so from one aversion to another, 'till we had worked up ourselves to such a pitch of complaisance, that when the dinner was to come in, we inquired the name of every dish, and hoped it would be no offence to any of the company before it was admitted. When we had sat down, this civility among us turned the discourse from eatables to other sorts of aversions; and the eternal cat, which plagues every conversation of this nature, began then to engross the subject. One had sweated at the sight of it, another had smelled it out as it lay concealed in a very distant cupboard; and he who crowned the whole set of these stories, reckoned up the number of times in which it had occasioned him to swoon away. At last, says he, that you may all be satisfied of my invincible aversion to a cat, I shall give an unanswerable instance: As I was going through a street of London, where I never had been till then, I felt a general damp and faintness all over me, which I could not tell how to account for, 'till I chanced to cast my eyes upwards, and found that I was passing under a sign-post on which the picture of a cat was hung.

THE extravagance of this turn in the way of surprise, gave a stop to the talk we had been carrying on; some were silent because they doubted, and others because they were conquered in their own way; so that the gentleman had opportunity to press the belief of it upon us, and let us see that he was rather exposing himself than ridiculing others.

I must freely own, that I did not all this while disbelieve every thing that was said; but yet I thought some in the company had been endeavouring who should pitch the bar farthest; that it had for some time been a measuring cast, and at last my friend of the cat and sign-post had thrown beyond them all.

I THEN considered the manner in which this story had been received, and the possibility that it might have passed for a jest upon others, if he had not laboured against himself. From hence, thought I, there are two ways which the well-bred world generally takes to correct such a practice, when they do not think fit to contradict it flatly.

THE first of these is a general silence, which I would not advise any one to interpret in his own behalf. It is often the effect of prudence in avoiding a quarrel, when they see another drive so fast that there is no stopping him without being run against; and but very seldom the effect of weakness in believing suddenly. The generality of mankind are not so grossly ignorant, as some overbearing spirits would persuade themselves; and if the authority of a character, or a caution against danger, make us suppress our opinions, yet neither of these are of force enough to suppress our thoughts of them. If a man, who has endeavoured to amuse his company with improbabilities, could but look into their minds, he would find that they imagine he lightly esteems of their sense when he thinks to impose upon them, and that he is less esteemed by them for his attempt in doing so. His endeavour to glory at their expence becomes a ground of quarrel, and the scorn and indifference with which they entertain it begins the immediate punishment: and indeed (if we should even go no further) silence, or a negligent indifference, has a deeper way of wounding than opposition, because opposition proceeds from an anger that has a sort of generous sentiment for the adversary mingling along with it, while it shews that there is some esteem in your mind for him; in short, that you think him worth while to contest with; but silence, or a negligent indifference, proceeds from anger mixed with a scorn, that shews another he is thought by you too contemptible to be regarded.

THE other method which the world has taken for correcting this practice of false surprise, is to overshoot such talkers in their own bow, or to raise the story with further degrees of impossibility, and set up for a voucher to them in such a manner as must let them see they stand detected. Thus I have heard a discourse was once managed upon the effects of fear. One of the company had given an account how it had turned his friend's hair grey in a night when the terrors of a shipwreck encompassed him. Another taking the hint from hence, began, upon his own knowledge, to enlarge his instances of the like nature to such a number, that it was not probable he could ever have met with them; and as he still grounded those upon different causes, for the sake of the variety, it might seem at last, from his share of the conversation, almost impossible that any one who can feel the passion of fear should all his life escape so common an effect of it. By this time some of the company grew negligent, or desirous to contradict him; but one rebuked the rest with an appearance of severity, and with the known old story in his head, assured them they need not scruple to believe that the fear of any thing can make a man's hair grey, since he knew one whose periwig had suffered so by it. Thus he stopped the talk, and made them easy. Thus is the same method taken to bring us to shame, which we fondly take to increase our character. It is indeed a kind of mimicry, by which another puts on our air of conversation to show us to ourselves: he seems to look ridiculous before you, that you may remember how near a resemblance you bear to him, or that you may know that he will not lie under the imputation of believing you. Then it is that you are struck dumb immediately with a conscientious shame for what you have been saying. Then it is that you are inwardly grieved at the sentiments which you cannot but perceive others entertain concerning you. In short, you are against yourself: the laugh of the company runs against you: the censuring world is obliged to you for that triumph which you have allowed them at your own expence; and truth, which you have injured, has a near way of being revenged on you, when by the bare repetition of your story you become a frequent diversion for the public.

Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ THE other day, walking in Pancras church-yard, ‘ I thought of your paper wherein you mention ‘ epitaphs, and am of opinion this has a thought in it ‘ worth being communicated to your readers.

Here innocence and beauty lies, whose breath
Was snatch’d by early, not untimely death.
Hence did she go, just as she did begin
Sorrow to know, before she knew to sin.
Death, that does sin and sorrow thus prevent,
Is the next blessing to a life well spent.

I am, Sir,

Your servant.

No. 539. Tuesday, November 18.

Heteroclyta sunt.

Quæ genus.

Be they Heteroclytes.

Mr SPECTATOR,

I AM a young widow of a good fortune and family, and just come to town; where I find I have clusters of pretty fellows come already to visit me, some dying with hopes, others with fears, though they never saw me. Now what I would beg of you, would be to know whether I may venture to use these pert fellows with the same freedom as I did my country acquaintance. I desire your leave to use them as to me shall seem meet, without imputation of a jilt; for since I make declaration that not one of them shall have me, I think I ought to be allowed the liberty of insulting those who have the vanity to believe it is in their power to make me break that resolution. There are schools for learning to use foils, frequented by those who never design to fight; and this useless way of aiming at the heart, without design to wound it on either side, is the play with which I am resolved to divert myself: the man who pretends to win, I shall use like him who comes into a fencing-school to pick a quarrel. I hope upon this foundation, you will give me the free use of the natural and artificial force of my eyes, looks, and gestures. As for verbal promises, I will make none, but shall have no mercy on the conceited interpreters of glances and motions. I am particularly skilled in the downcast eye, and the recovery into a sudden full aspect, and away again, as you may have seen sometimes practised by us country beauties beyond all that you have observed in courts and cities. Add

‘ to this, Sir, that I have a ruddy heedless look which ‘ covers artifice the best of any thing. Though I can ‘ dance very well, I affect a tottering, untaught way ‘ of walking, by which I appear an easy prey; and ‘ never exert my instructed charms till I find I have ‘ engaged a pursuer. Be pleased, Sir, to print this ‘ letter: which will certainly begin the chace of a ‘ rich widow: the many foldings, escapes, returns ‘ and doublings which I make, I shall from time to ‘ time communicate to you, for the better instruction ‘ of all females who set up, like me, for reducing the ‘ present exorbitant power and insolence of man.

I am, SIR,

Your faithful correspondent,

RELICTA LOVELY.

Dear Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ I DEPEND upon your professed respect for virtuous ‘ love, for your immediate answering the design of ‘ this letter; which is no other than to lay before the ‘ world the severity of certain parents who desire to ‘ suspend the marriage of a discreet young woman of ‘ eighteen, three years longer, for no other reason ‘ but that of her being too young to enter into that ‘ state. As to the consideration of riches, my circum‘ stances are such, that I cannot be suspected to make ‘ my addresses to her on such low motives as avarice ‘ or ambition. If ever innocence, wit, and beauty, ‘ united their utmost charms, they have in her. I ‘ wish you would expatiate a little on this subject, and ‘ admonish her parents that it may be from the very ‘ imperfection of human nature itself, and not any per‘ sonal frailty of her or me, that our inclinations baffled ‘ at present may alter; and while we are arguing ‘ with ourselves to put off the enjoyment of our pre‘ sent passions, our affections may change their objects ‘ in the operation. It is a very delicate subject to talk

‘ upon; but if it were but hinted, I am in hopes it ‘ would give the parties concerned some reflexion that ‘ might expedite our happiness. There is a possibility, ‘ and I hope I may say it without imputation of im-‘ modesty to her I love with the highest honour; I ‘ say, there is a possibility this delay may be as pain‘ ful to her as it is to me. If it be as much, it must ‘ be more, by reason of the severe rules the sex are un‘ der in being denied even the relief of complaint. If ‘ you oblige me in this, and I succeed, I promise you ‘ a place at my wedding, and a treatment suitable to ‘ your spectatorial dignity.

Your most humble servant,

EUSTACE.

S I R,

‘ I YESTERDAY heard a young gentleman, that look‘ ed as if he was just come to the town, and a scarf, ‘ upon evil-speaking; which subject you know, arch‘ bishop Tillotson has so nobly handled in a sermon ‘ in his Folio. As soon as ever he had named his text,
‘ and had opened a little the drift of his discourse, I ‘ was in great hopes he had been one of Sir ROGER’S ‘ chaplains. I have conceived so great an idea of the ‘ charming discourse above, that I should have thought ‘ one part of my sabbath very well spent in hearing a ‘ repetition of it. But alas! Mr SPECTATOR, this ‘ reverend divine gave us his Grace’s sermon, and yet ‘ I don’t know how, even I, that I am sure have read ‘ it at least twenty times, could not tell what to make ‘ of it, and was at a loss sometimes to guess what the ‘ man aimed at. He was so just indeed, as to give us ‘ all the heads and the sub divisions of the sermon:
‘ and farther, I think there was not one beautiful ‘ thought in it but what we had. But then, Sir, this ‘ gentleman made so many pretty additions; and he ‘ could never give us a paragraph of the sermon, but ' he introduced it with something which, methought,

 ' looked more like a design to shew his own ingenui' ty, than to instruct the people. In short, he added
 ' and curtailed in such a manner, that he vexed me,
 ' insomuch that I could not forbear thinking (what I
 ' confess, I ought not to have thought of in so holy a ' place) that this young spark was as justly blameable
 ' as Bullock or Penkethman when they mend a noble
 ' play of Shakespear or Johnson. Pray, Sir, take this ' into your consideration: and if we must be enter' tained with the works of any of those great men, de' sire these gentlemen to give them us as they find them,
 ' that so when we read them to our families at home,
 ' they may the better remember they have heard them
 ' at church.

S I R,

Your humble servant.

No. 540. Wednesday, November 19.

— Non deficit alter.

VIRG. ÆN. 6. v. 143.

A second is not wanting.

MR SPECTATOR,

' THERE is no part of your writings which I ' have in more esteem than your criticism upon
 ' Milton. It is an honourable and candid endeavour
 ' to set the works of our noble writers in the graceful
 ' light which they deserve. You will lose much of ' my kind inclination towards you, if you do not at' tempt the encomium of Spencer also, or at least in' dulge my passion for that charming author so far as ' to print the loose hints I now give you on that sub' ject.

' SPENCER's general plan is the representation of
 ' six virtues, holiness, temperance, chastity, friend‘ ship, justice, and courtesy, in six legends by six persons. The six personages are supposed under proper allegories suitable to their respective characters, to do all that is necessary for the full manifestation of the respective virtues which they are to exert.

‘ THESE one might undertake to shew under the several heads, are admirably drawn: no images improper, and most surprisingly beautiful. The red cross knight runs through the whole steps of the Christian life; Guyon does all that temperance possibly can require: Britomartis (a woman) observes the true rules of unaffected chastity: Arthegal is in every respect of life strictly and wisely just: Calidore is rightly courteous.

‘ IN short, in Fairy-land, where knights-errant have a full scope to range, and to do even what Ariostos or Orlandos could not do in the world without breaking into credibility, Spencer’s knights have, under these six heads, given a full and truly poetical system of Christian, public, and low life.

‘ HIS legend of friendship is more diffuse, and yet even there the allegory is finely drawn, only the heads various; one knight could not there support all the parts.

‘ TO do honour to his country, Prince Arthur is an universal hero; in holiness, temperance, chastity, and justice, super-excellent. For the same reason, and to compliment Queen Elisabeth, Gloriana, queen of the fairies, whose court was the asylum of the oppressed, represents that glorious queen. At her commands all these knights set forth, and only at hers the red-cross knight destroys the dragon; Guyon overturns the bower of bliss; Arthegal (i. e. Justice) beats down Geryonea (i. e. Philip II. king of Spain) to rescue Belge (i. e. Holland) and he beats the Grento (the same Philip in another light) to restore Irena (i. e. peace to Europe.)

‘ CHASTITY being the first female virtue, Brito-

‘ martis is a Briton; her part is fine, tho’ it requires ‘ explication.

‘ His stile is very poetical; no puns, affectations of ‘ wit, forced antitheses, or any of that low tribe.

‘ His old words are all true English, and numbers ‘ exquisite; and since of words there is the multa re- ‘ nascentur, since they are all proper, such a poem ‘ should not (any more than Milton’s) subsist all of it ‘ of common ordinary words. See instances of de‘ scriptions.

*Causeless jealousy in Britomartis, Book V. Canto 6.
Stanza 14. in its restlessness.*

Like as a wayward child, whose founder sleep
Is broken with some fearful dream’s affright,
With froward will doth set himself to weep,
Ne can be still’d for all his nurse’s might.
But kicks, and squalls and shrieks for fell despite;
Now scratching her, and her loose locks misusing,
Now seeking darkness, and now seeking light;
Then craving suck, and then the suck refusing;
Such was this lady’s loves in her love’s fond accusing.

Curiosity occasioned by jealousy, upon occasion of her lover’s absence. Ibid. Stanza 8, 9.

Then as she looked long, at last she spy’d
One coming towards her with hasty speed,
Well ween’d she then, ere him she plain descry’d,
That it was one sent from her love indeed;
Whereat her heart was fill’d with hope and dread,
Ne would she stay till he in place could come,
But ran to meet him forth, to know his tidings some;
Even in the door him meeting, she begun,
And where is he, thy lord, and how far hence
Declare at once; and hath he lost or won?

Care and his house are described thus, IV. 6, 33, 34, 35.

Not far away, not meet for any guest,
They spy'd a little cottage, like some poor man's nest.

34.

There entering in, they found the good man's self,
Full busily unto his work ybent,
Who was so weel a wretched wearish elf,
With hollow eyes and raw-bone cheeks forspent,
As if he had in prison long been pent.
Full black and grisly did his face appear,
Besmear'd with smoak that nigh his eye-sight blent,
With rugged beard and hoary shaggy hair,
The which he never wont to comb, nor comely shear.

35.

Rude was his garment and to rags all rent,
No better had he, ne for better cared;
His blistered hands amongst the cinders brent,
And fingers filthy, with long nails prepared,
Right fit to rend the food on which he fared.
His name was Care; a blacksmith by his trade,
That neither day nor night from working spar'd,
But to small purpose iron wedges made;
These be unquiet thoughts that careful minds invade.

‘HOMER’s epithets were much admired by antiquity: see what great justness and variety there is in these epithets of the trees in the forest where the red-cross knight lost Truth, B. I. Cant. I. Stan. 8, 9.

The failing pine, the cedar proud and tall,
The vine-prop elm, the poplar never dry,
The builder oak, sole king of forests all,
The aspine good for staves, the cypress funeral.

9.

The laurel, meed of mighty conquerors,
And poets sage: the fir that weepeth still.
The willow worn of forlorn paramours,

The yew obedient to the bender's will,
 The birch for shafts, the fallow for the mill;
 The myrrhe sweet, bleeding in the bitter wound,
 The warlike beech, the ash for nothing ill,
 The fruitful olive, and the plantane round,
 The carver holm, the mapple seldom inward found.

' I SHALL trouble you no more, but desire you to let ' me conclude with these verses, though I think they ' have already been quoted by you: they are directi' ons to young ladies oppressed with calumny. VI. 6. 14.

The best, said he, that I can you advise,
 Is to avoid th' occasion of the ill;
 For when the cause whence evil doth arise
 Removed is, the effect surceaseth still.
 Abstain from pleasure, and restrain your will,
 Subdue desire, and bridle loose delight,
 Use scantied diet, and forbear your fill,
 Shun secrecy, and talk in open sight;
 So shall you soon repair your present evil plight. T

No. 541. Thursday, November 20.

[By MR HUGHES.]

*Format enim natura prius nos intus ad omnem Fortunarum habitum; juvat aut impellit ad iram, Aut ad humum mœrore gravi deducit et angit,
 Post effert animi motus interprete lingua.*

HOR. Ars poet. v. 108.

*The varying face should every passion show,
 And words of sorrow wear the look of woe;
 Let it in joy assume a vivid air;
 Fierce when in rage; in seriousness severe:
 For nature to each change of fortune forms
 The secret soul, and all its passions warms:
 Transports to rage, dilates the heart with mirth,*

Wrings the sad soul, and bends it down to earth.

The tongue these various movements must express.

FRANCIS.

MY friend the TEMPLAR, whom I have so often mentioned in these writings, having determined to lay aside his poetical studies, in order to a closer pursuit of the law, has put together, as a farewell essay, some thoughts concerning pronunciation and action, which he has given me leave to communicate to the public. They are chiefly collected from his favourite author, Cicero, who is known to have been an intimate friend of Roscius the actor, and a good judge of dramatic performances, as well as the most eloquent pleader of the time in which he lived.

CICERO concludes his celebrated books de Oratore, with some precepts for pronunciation and action, without which part he affirms that the best orator in the world can never succeed; and an indifferent one, who is master of this, shall gain much greater applause. What could make a stronger impression, says he, than those exclamations of Gracchus——“ Whither shall I “ turn? Wretch that I am! to what place betake “ myself? Shall I go to the Capitol?——Alas! it is “ overflowed with my brother’s blood. Or shall I re“ tire to my house? Yet there I behold my mother “ plunged in misery, weeping and despairing!”——

These breaks and turns of passion, it seems, were so enforced by the eyes, voice and gesture of the speaker, that his very enemies could not refrain from tears. I insist, says Tully, upon this the rather, because our orators, who are as it were actors of the truth itself, have quitted this manner of speaking; and the players, who are but imitators of truth, have taken it up.

I SHALL therefore pursue the hint he has here given me, and for the service of the British stage, I shall copy some of the rules which this great Roman master has laid down; yet, without confining myself wholly to his thoughts or words: and to adapt this essay the more to the purpose for which I intend it, instead of the examples he has inserted in this discourse, out of the ancient tragedies, I shall make use of parallel passages out of the most celebrated of our own.

THE design of art is to assist action as much as possible in the representation of nature; for the appearance of reality is that which moves us in all representations, and these have always the greater force, the nearer they approach to nature, and the less they shew of imitation.

NATURE herself has assigned to every motion of the soul its peculiar cast of the countenance, tone of voice, and manner of gesture: and the whole person, all the features of the face and tones of the voice, answer, like strings upon musical instruments, to the impressions made on them by the mind. Thus the sounds of the voice, according to the various touches which raise them, form themselves into an acute or grave, quick or slow, loud or soft tone. These too may be subdivided into various kinds of tones, as the gentle, the rough, the contracted, the diffuse, the continued, the intermitted, the broken, abrupt, winding, softened, or elevated. Every one of these may be employed with art and judgment; and all supply the actor, as colours do the painter, with an expressive variety.

ANGER exerts its peculiar voice in an acute, raised, and hurrying sound. The passionate character of King Lear, as it is admirably drawn by Shakespear, abounds with the strongest instances of this kind.

——Death! Confusion!

Fiery!——what quality?——why Gloster! Gloster!

I'd speak with the Duke of Cornwall and his wife.

Are they inform'd of this? my breath and blood!

Fiery! the fiery duke?——&c.

SORROW and complaint demand a voice quite different, flexible, slow, interrupted, and modulated in a mournful, tone; as in that pathetical soliloquy of Cardinal Wolsey on his fall.

Farewel!——a long farewel to all my greatness!
This is the state of man!——to day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him,
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls as I do.

WE have likewise a fine example of this in the whole part of Andromache in the Distrest mother, particularly in these lines.

I'll go, and in the anguish of my heart
Weep o'er my child———if he must die, my life
Is wrapt in his, I shall not long survive.
'Tis for his sake that I have suffered life,
Groan'd in captivity, and outlived Hector.
Yes, my Astyanax, we'll go together!
Together to the realms of night we'll go;
There to thy ravished eyes thy fire I'll show,
And point him out among the shades below.

FEAR expresses itself in a low, hesitating and abject sound. If the reader considers the following speech of lady Macbeth, while her husband is about the murder of Duncan and his grooms, he will imagine her even affrighted with the sound of her own voice while she is speaking it.

Alas! I am afraid they have awak'd,
And 'tis not done; th' attempt, and not the deed,
Confounds us—hark! —I laid the daggers ready,
He could not miss them. Had he not resembled
My father as he slept, I had done it.

COURAGE assumes a louder tone, as in that speech of Don Sebastian.

Here satiate all your fury ;
Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul that like an ample shield
Can take in all, and verge enough for more.

PLEASURE dissolves into a luxurious, mild, tender, and joyous modulation ; as in the following lines in Caius Marius.

Lavinia ! O there's music in the name,
That softning me to infant tendernefs,
Makes my heart spring, like the first leaps of life.

AND perplexity is different from all these ; grave, but not bemoaning, with an earnest uniform sound of voice ; as in that celebrated speech of Hamlet.

To be, or not to be ! —that is the question :
Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
The stings and arrows of outrageous fortune,
Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them. To die, to sleep ;
No more ; and by a sleep to say we end
The heart-ach, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to ; 'tis a consummation Devoutly to be wished. To die, to sleep—
To sleep ; perchance to dream. I ay, there's the rub.
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause—There's the respect
That makes calamity of so long life ;
For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,
Th' oppressor's wrongs, the proud man's contumely,
The pangs of despis'd love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of th' unworthy takes,
When he himself might his quietus make

With a bare bodkin ? Who would fardles bear,
To groan and sweat under a weary life ?
But that the dread of something after death,
The undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
No traveller returns, puzzles the will,
And makes us rather chuse those ills we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of.

As all these varieties of voice are to be directed by the sense, so the action is to be directed by the voice, and, with a beautiful propriety, as it were to enforce it. The arm, which by a strong figure Tully calls the orator's weapon, is to be sometimes raised and extended ; and the hand, by its motion, sometimes to lead, and sometimes to follow the words as they are uttered. The stamping of the foot too has its proper expression in contention, anger, or absolute command. But the face is the epitome of the whole man, and the eyes are as it were the epitome of the face ; for which reason, he says, the best judges among the Romans were not extremely pleased, even with Roscius himself in his mask. No part of the body, besides the face, is capable of as many changes as there are different emotions in the mind, and of expressing them all by those changes. Nor is this to be done without the freedom of the eyes ; therefore Theophrastus called one, who barely rehearsed his speech with his eyes fixed, an absent actor.

As the countenance admits of so great variety, it requires also great judgment to govern it. Not that the form of the face is to be shifted on every occasion, lest it turn to farce and buffoonry : but it is certain, that the eyes have a wonderful power of marking the emotions of the mind, sometimes by a stedfast look, sometimes by a careless one, now by a sudden regard, then by a joyful sparkling, as the sense of the words is diversified : for action is, as it were, the speech of the features and limbs, and must therefore conform itself always to the sentiments of the soul. And it may be observed, that in all which relates to the gesture, there is a wonderful force implanted by nature, since the vulgar, the unskilful, and even the most barbarous are chiefly affected by this. None are moved by the sound of words, but those who understand the language; and the sense of many things is lost upon men of a dull apprehension: but action is a kind of universal tongue; all men are subject to the same passions, and consequently know the same marks of them in others, by which they themselves express them.

PERHAPS some of my readers may be of opinion, that the hints I have here made use of, out of Cicero, are somewhat too refined for the players on our theatre: in answer to which, I venture to lay it down as a maxim, that without good sense no one can be a good player, and that he is very unfit to personate the dignity of a Roman hero, who cannot enter into the rules for pronounciation and gesture delivered by a Roman orator.

THERE is another thing which my author does not think too minute to insist on, though it is purely mechanical; and that is the right pitching of the voice. On this occasion he tells the story of Gracchus, who employed a servant with a little ivory pipe to stand behind him, and give him the right pitch, as often as he wandered too far from the proper modulation. Every voice, says Tully, has its particular medium and compass, and the sweetness of speech consists in leading it through all the variety of tones naturally, and without touching any extreme. Therefore, says he, Leave the pipe at home, but carry the sense of this custom with you.

No. 542. Friday, November 21.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Et sibi præferri se gaudet—

OVID. Met. l. 2. v. 430.

————— *He heard,
Well-pleased, himself before himself preferr'd.*

ADDISON.

WHEN I have been present in assemblies where my paper has been talked of, I have been very well pleased to hear those who would detract from the author of it observe, that the letters which are sent to the Spectator are as good, if not better than any of his works. Upon this occasion many letters of mirth are usually mentioned, which some think the Spectator writ to himself, and which others commend because they fancy he received them from his correspondents: Such are these from the Valetudinarian; the inspector of the sign-posts; the master of the fan-exercise; with that of the hooped petticoat; that of Nicholas Hart the annual sleeper; that from Sir John Envill; that upon the London cries; with multitudes of the same nature. As I love nothing more than to mortify the ill-natured, that I may do it effectually, I must acquaint them, they have very often praised me when they did not design it, and that they have approved my writings when they thought they had derogated from them. I have heard several of these unhappy gentlemen proving, by undeniable arguments, that I was not able to pen a letter which I had written the day before. Nay, I have heard some of them throwing out ambiguous expressions, and giving the company reason to suspect that they themselves did me the honour to send me such and such a particular epistle, which happened to be talked of with the esteem or approbation of these who were present. Those rigid critics are so afraid of allowing me any thing which does not belong to me, that they will not be positive whether the lion, the wild boar and the flower pots in the play-house, did not actually write those letters which came to me in their names. I must therefore inform these gentlemen, that I often choose this way of casting my thoughts into a letter for the following reasons: first, out of the policy of those who try their jest upon another, before they own it themselves. Secondly, because I would extort a little praise from such who will never applaud any thing whose author is known and certain. Thirdly, because it gave me an opportunity of introducing a great variety of characters into my work, which could not have been done, had I always written in the person of the Spectator. Fourthly, because the dignity Spectatorial would have suffered, had I published as from myself those several ludicrous compositions which I have ascribed to fictitious names and characters. And lastly, because they often serve to bring in more naturally, such additional reflexions as have been placed at the end of them.

THERE are others who have likewise done me a very particular honour, though undesignedly. These are such who will needs have it, that I have translated or borrowed many of my thoughts out of books which are written in other languages. I have heard of a person who is more famous for his library than his learning, that has asserted this more than once in his private conversation. Were it true, I am sure he could not speak it from his own knowledge; but had he read the books which he has collected, he would find this accusation to be wholly groundless. Those who are truly learned will acquit me in this point, in which I have been so far from offending, that I have been scrupulous perhaps to a fault in quoting the authors of several passages which I might have made my own. But as this assertion is in reality an encomium on what I have published, I ought rather to glory in it, than endeavour to confute it.

SOME are so very willing to alienate from me that small reputation which might accrue to me from any of these my speculations, that they attribute some of the best of them to those imaginary manuscripts with which I have introduced them. There are others, I must confess, whose objections have given me a greater concern, as they seem to reflect, under this head, rather on my morality than on my invention. These are they who say an author is guilty of falsehood, when he talks to the public of manuscripts which he never saw, or describes scenes of action or discourse in which he was never engaged. But these gentlemen would do well to consider, there is not a fable or parable which ever was made use of, that is not liable to this exception; since nothing, according to this notion, can be related innocently, which was not once matter of fact. Besides, I think the most ordinary reader may be able to discover by my way of writing, what I deliver in these occurrences as truth, and what as fiction.

SINCE I am unawares engaged in answering the several objections which have been made against these my works, I must take notice that there are some who affirm a paper of this nature should always turn upon diverting subjects, and others who find fault with every one of them that hath not an immediate tendency to the advancement of religion or learning. I shall leave these gentlemen to dispute it out among themselves; since I see one half of my conduct patronized by each side. Were I serious on an improper subject, or trifling in a serious one, I should deservedly draw upon me the censure of my readers; or were I conscious of any thing in my writings that is not innocent at least, or that the greatest part of them were not sincerely designed to discountenance vice and ignorance, and support the interest of true wisdom and virtue, I should be more severe upon myself than the public is disposed to be.

IN the mean while I desire my reader to consider every particular paper or discourse as a distinct tract by itself, and independent of every thing that goes before or after it.

I SHALL end this paper with the following letter, which was really sent me, as some others have been which I have published, and for which I must own myself indebted to their respective writers.

S I R,

I WAS this morning in a company of your wellwishers, when we read over with great satisfaction, Tully's observations on action adapted to the British theatre: though, by the way, we were very sorry to find that you have disposed of another member of your club. Poor Sir Roger is dead, and the worthy clergyman is dying. Captain SENTRY has taken possession of a fair estate; WILL HONEYCOMB has married a farmer's daughter; and the Templar withdraws himself into the business of his own profession. What will all this end in? We are afraid it portends no good to the public. Unless you very speedily fix a day for the election of new members, we are under apprehensions of losing the British Spectator. I hear of a party of ladies who intend to address you on this subject, and question not, if you do not give us the slip very suddenly, that you will receive addresses from all parts of the kingdom to continue so useful a work. Pray deliver us out of this perplexity, and among the multitude of your readers you will particularly oblige

Your most sincere friend and servant,

PHILO-SPEC.

No 543. Saturday, November 22.

—————Facies non omnibus una,

Nec diversa tamen— OVID. Met. l. 2. v. 131

Though not alike consenting parts agree, Fashion'd with similar variety.

THOSE who were skilful in anatomy among the ancients, concluded from the outward and inward make of an human body, that it was the work of a being transcendently wise and powerful. As the world grew more enlightened in this art, their discoveries gave them fresh opportunities of admiring the conduct of providence in the formation of an human body. Galen was converted by his dissections, and could not but own a Supreme Being upon a survey of this his handy-work. There were, indeed, many parts of which the old anatomists did not know the certain use, but as they saw that most of those which they examined were adapted with admirable art to their several functions, they did not question but those, whose uses they could not determine, were contrived with the same wisdom for respective ends and purposes. Since the circulation of the blood has been found out, and many other great discoveries have been made by our modern anatomists, we see new wonders in the human frame, and discern several important uses for those parts, which uses the ancients knew nothing of. In short, the body of man is such a subject as stands the utmost test of examination. Though it appears formed with the nicest wisdom, upon the most superficial survey of it, it still mends upon the search, and produces our surprise and amazement in proportion as we pry into it. What I have here said of an human body, may be applied to the body of every animal which has been the subject of anatomical observations.

THE body of an animal is an object adequate to our senses. It is a particular system of providence, that lies in a narrow compass. The eye is able to command it, and by successive inquiries can search into all its parts. Could the body of the whole earth, or indeed the whole universe be thus submitted to the examination of our senses, were it not too big and disproportioned for our inquiries, too unwieldy for the management of the eye and hand, there is no question but it would appear to us as curious and well-contrived a frame as that of an human body. We would see the same concatenation and subserviency, the same necessity and usefulness, the same beauty and harmony, in all and every of its parts, as what we discover in the body of every single animal.

THE more extended our reason is, and the more able to grapple with immense objects, the greater still are those discoveries which it makes of wisdom and providence in the works of the creation. As Sir Isaac Newton, who stands up as the miracle of the present age, can look through a whole planetary system; consider it in its weight, number, and measure; and draw from it as many demonstrations of infinite power and wisdom, as a more confined understanding is able to deduce from the system of an human body.

BUT to return to our speculations on anatomy, I shall here consider the fabric and texture of the bodies of animals in one particular view; which, in my opinion, shews the hand of a thinking and all-wise Being in their formation, with the evidence of a thousand demonstrations. I think we may lay this down as an incontestable principle, that chance never acts in a perpetual uniformity and consistence with itself. If one should always fling the same number with ten thousand dice, or see every throw just five times less, or five times more in number than the throw which immediately preceded it, who would not imagine there is some invifible power which directs the caft? This is the proceeding which we find in the operations of nature. Every kind of animal is diverfified by different magnitudes, each of which gives rife to a different fpecies. Let a man trace the dog or lion kind, and he will obferve how many of the works of nature are publifhed, if I may ufe the expreffion, in a variety of editions. If we look into the reptile world, or into thofe different kinds of animals that fill the element of water, we meet with the fame repetitions among feveral fpecies, that differ very little from one another, but in fize and bulk. You find the fame creature that is drawn at large, copied out in feveral proportions, and ending in miniature. It would be tedious to produce inftances of this regular conduct in Providence, as it would be fuperfluous to thofe who are verfed in the natural hiftory of animals. The magnificent harmony of the univerfe is fuch, that we may obferve innumerable divifions running upon the fame ground. I might alfo extend this speculation to the dead parts of nature, in which we may find matter difpofed into many similar fyftems, as well in our furvey of ftars and planets, as of ftones, vegetables and other fublunary parts of the creation. In a word, Providence has fhewn the richnefs of its goodnefs and wifdom, not only in the production of many original fpecies, but in the multiplicity of defcants which it has made on every original fpecies in particular.

BUT to purfue this thought ftill farther: every living creature confidered in itfelf has very many complicated parts that are exact copies of fome other parts which it poffeffes, and which are complicated in the fame manner. One eye would have been fufficient for the fubfiftence and prefervation of an animal; but, in order to better his condition, we fee another placed with a mathematical exactnefs in the fame moft advantageous fituation, and in every particular of the fame fize and texture. Is it possible for chance to be thus delicate and uniform in her operations? Should a million of dice turn up twice together the same number, the wonder would be nothing in comparison with this. But when we see this similitude and resemblance in the arm, the hand, the fingers; when we see one half of the body entirely correspond with the other in all those minute strokes, without which a man might have very well subsisted; nay, when we often see a single part repeated an hundred times in the same body, notwithstanding it consists of the most intricate weaving of numberless fibres, and those parts differing still in magnitude, as the convenience of their particular situation requires; sure a man must have a strange cast of understanding, who does not discover the finger of God in so wonderful a work. These duplicates in those parts of the body, without which a man might have very well subsisted, though not so well as with them, are a plain demonstration of an all-wise contriver; as those more numerous copyings, which are found among the vessels of the same body are evident demonstrations that they could not be the work of chance. This argument receives additional strength, if we apply it to every animal, and insect within our knowledge, as well as to those numberless living creatures that are objects too minute for a human eye: and if we consider how the several species in this whole world of life resemble one another in very many particulars, so far as is convenient for their respective states of existence; it is much more probable that an hundred million of dice should be casually thrown a hundred million of times in the same number, than that the body of any single animal should be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of matter. And that the like chance should arise in innumerable instances, requires a degree of credulity that is not under the direction of common sense. We may carry this consideration yet further, if we reflect on the two sexes in every living species, with their resemblances to each other, and those particular distinctions that were necessary for the keeping up of this great world of life.

THERE are many more demonstrations of a Supreme Being, and of his transcendent wisdom, power and goodness in the formation of the body of a living creature, for which I refer my reader to other writings, particularly to the sixth book of the poem, intitled Creation, where the anatomy of the human body is described with great perspicuity and elegance. I have been particular on the thought which runs through this speculation, because I have not seen it enlarged upon by others.

No. 544. Monday, November 24.

Nunquam ita quisquam tam bene subducta ratione ad vitam fuit.

*Quin res, ætas, usus semper aliquid apportet novi, Aliquid moneat; ut illa, quæ te scire credas, nescias,
Et quæ tibi putaris prima, in experiando ut repudies.*

TER. Adelph. act. 5. sc. 2.

No man was ever so completely skilled in the conduct of life, as not to receive new information from age and experience; insomuch that we find ourselves really ignorant of what we thought we understood, and see cause to reject what we fancied our truest interest.

THERE are, I think, sentiments in the following letter from my friend Captain SENTRY, which discover a rational and equal frame of mind, as well prepared for an advantageous as an unfortunate change of condition.

S I R, Coverley hall, Nov. 15. Worcestershire.

I AM come to the possession of the estate of my honoured kinsman Sir ROGER DE COVERLEY; and I assure you I find it no easy task to keep up the figure of master of the fortune which was so handsomely enjoyed by that honest plain man. I cannot (with respect to the great obligations I have, be it spoken) reflect upon his character, but I am confirmed in the truth which I have, I think, heard spoken at the club, to wit, that a man of a warm and well disposed heart with a very small capacity, is highly superior in human society to him, who with the greatest talents, is cold and languid in his affections. But, alas! why do I make a difficulty in speaking of my worthy ancestor's failings? His little absurdities and incapacity for the conversation of the politest men are dead with him, and his greater qualities are even now useful to him. I know not whether by naming those disabilities I do not enhance his merit, since he has left behind him a reputation in his country, which would be worth the pains of the wisest man's whole life to arrive at. By the way I must observe to you, that many of your readers have mislook that passage in your writings, wherein Sir ROGER is reported to have inquired into the private character of the young woman at the tavern. I know you mentioned that circumstance as an instance of the simplicity and innocence of his mind, which made him imagine it a very easy thing to reclaim one of those criminals, and not as an inclination in him to be guilty with her. The less discerning of your readers cannot enter into that delicacy of description in the character; but indeed my chief business at this time is to represent to you my present state of mind, and the satisfaction I promise to myself in the possession of my new fortune. I have continued all Sir ROGER's servants, except such as it was a relief to dismiss into little beings within my manor; those who are in a list of the good knight's own hand to be taken care of by me, I have quartered upon such as have taken new leases of me, and added so many advantages, during the lives of the persons so quartered, that it is the interest of those whom they are joined with, to cherish and befriend them upon all occasions. I find a considerable sum of ready money, which I am laying out among my dependents at the common interest, but with a design to lend it according to their merit, rather than according to their ability. I shall lay a tax upon such as I have highly obliged, to become security to me for such of their own poor youth, whether male or female, as want help towards getting into some being in the world. I hope I shall be able to manage my affairs so, as to improve my fortune every year, by doing acts of kindness. I will lend my money to the use of none but indigent men, secured by such as have ceased to be indigent by the favour of my family or myself. What makes this the more practicable is, that if they will do any one good with my money, they are welcome to it upon their own security: and I make no exception against it, because the persons who enter into the obligations, do it for their own family. I have laid out four thousand pounds this way, and it is not to be imagined what a croud of people are obliged by it. In cases where Sir ROGER has recommended, I have lent money to put out children, with a clause which makes void the obligation, in case the infant dies before he is out of his apprenticeship; by which means the kindred and masters are extremely careful of breeding him to industry, that he may repay it himself by his labour, in three years journey-work after his time is out, for the use of his securities. Opportunities of this kind are all that have occurred ever since I came to my estate; but I assure you I will preserve a constant disposition to ‘ catch at all the occasions I can to promote the good ‘ and happiness of my neighbourhood.

‘ But give me leave to lay before you a little esta‘ blishment which has grown out of my past life, that, ‘ I doubt not, will administer great satisfaction to me ‘ in that part of it, whatever that is, which is to ‘ come.

‘ THERE is a prejudice in favour of the way of life
‘ to which a man has been educated, which I know ‘ not whether it would not be faulty to overcome: it ‘ is like a partiality to the interest of one’s country be‘ fore that of any other nation. It is from an habit ‘ of thinking, grown upon me from my youth spent ‘ in arms, that I have ever held gentlemen who have ‘ preserved modesty, good nature, justice and huma‘ nity in a soldier’s life, to be the most valuable and ‘ worthy persons of the human race. To pass thro’ ‘ imminent dangers, suffer painful watchings, fright‘ ful alarms, and laborious marches for the greater ‘ part of a man’s time, and pass the rest in sobriety, ‘ conformable to the rules of the most virtuous civil ‘ life, is a merit too great to deserve the treatment it ‘ usually meets with among the other part of the world.
‘ But I assure you, Sir, were there not very many who ‘ have this worth, we could never have seen the glo‘ rious events which we have in our days. I need not ‘ say more to illustrate the character of a soldier, than ‘ to tell you he is the very contrary to him you ob‘ serve loud, saucy, and over-bearing in a red coat a‘ bout town. But I was going to tell you, that in ho‘ nour of the profession of arms, I have set apart a cer‘ tain sum of money for a table for such gentlemen as ‘ have served their country in the army, and will ‘ please from time to time to sojourn all, or any part ‘ of the year at Coverley. Such of them as will do me ‘ that honour, shall find horses, servants and all things ‘ necessary for their accommodation, and enjoyment of ‘ all the conveniences of life in a pleasant various country. If Colonel Camperfelt be in town, and his abilities are not employed another way in the service, there is no man would be more welcome here. That gentleman's thorough knowledge in his profession, together with the simplicity of his manners, and goodness of his heart, would induce others like him to honour my abode; and I should be glad my acquaintance would take themselves to be invited or not, as their characters have an affinity to his.

I would have all my friends know, that they need not fear (though I am become a country gentleman) I will trespass against their temperance and sobriety. No, Sir, I shall retain so much of the good sentiments for the conduct of life, which we cultivated in each other at our club, as to condemn all inordinate pleasures; but particularly remember, with our beloved Tully, that the delight in food consists in desire, not satiety. They who most passionately pursue pleasure, seldomest arrive at it. Now I am writing to a philosopher, I cannot forbear mentioning the satisfaction I took in the passage I read yesterday in the same Tully. A nobleman of Athens made a compliment to Plato the morning after he had supped at his house, Your entertainments do not only please when you give them, but also the day after.

I am, my worthy friend,

T

Your most obedient humble servant,

WILLIAM SENTRY.

No 545. Tuesday November 25.

Quin potius pacem æternam pactosque hymenæos

Exercemus—

VIRG. Æn. 4. v. 99.

Let us in bonds of lasting peace unite,

And celebrate the hymeneal rite.

I CANNOT but think the following letter from the Emperor of China to the Pope of Rome, proposing a coalition of the Chinese and Roman churches, will be acceptable to the curious. I must confess I myself being of opinion that the Emperor has as much authority to be interpreter to him he pretends to expound, as the Pope has to be vicar of the sacred person he takes upon him to represent, I was not a little pleased with their treaty of alliance. What progress the negotiation between his majesty of Rome and his holiness of China makes (as we daily writers say upon subjects where we are at a loss) time will let us know. In the mean time, since they agree in the fundamentals of power and authority, and differ only in matters of faith, we may expect the matter will go on without difficulty.

Copia di littera del re della China al Papa, interpretata dal padre segretario dell India della compagna Giesu.

A voi beneditto sopra i benedette PP, ed interpretatore grande de pontefice e pastore Xmo, dispensatore dell' oglio de i re d' Europe Clemente XI.

‘ I L favourito amico di Dio Gionata 7^o, potentissimo ‘ sopra tutti i potentissimi della terra, altissimo so‘ pra tutti gl’ altissimi sotto il sole e la luna, che siede ‘ nella sede di smeraldo della China sopra cento scali-‘ ni d’oro, ad interpretare la lingua di Dio a tutti i ‘ descendenti fedeli d’ abramo, che de la vita e la morte

‘ a cento quindici regni, ed a cento settante isole ; scrive ‘ con la penna dello struzzo vergine, e manda salute ‘ ed accrescimento di vecchiezza.

‘ ESSENDO arrivato il tempo in cui il fiore della re-‘ ale nostra gioventù deve maturare i frutti della nostra ‘ vecchezza, e confortare con quell’ i desiderii de i po‘ puli nostri divoti, e propogare il seme di quella pianta ‘ che deve proteggerli ; habbiamo stabilito d’ accompa-‘ gnarci, con una virgine eccelsa ed amorosa, allattata al-‘ al mammella della leonessa forte e dell’ agnella man-‘ sueta. Percio essendo ci stato figurato sempre il vostro ‘ populo Europeo Romano per paese di donne invitte, i ‘ forte, e chaste, allongiamo la nostra mano potente, a ‘ stringere una di loro, e questa fara una vostra nipote, o ‘ nipote di qualche al tro grari sacerdote Latino, che ‘ sia guardata dall’ occhio dritto di Dio, fara feminata
‘ in lei l’ autorita di Sara, la fedelta d’ Esther, e la sapienza ‘ di Abba ; la vogliamo con l’ occhio che guarda il cielo, ‘ e la terra, e con la bocca della conchiglia che si pasce ‘ della ruggiada del matino. La sua eta non passi ducen‘ to corsi della luna, la sua statura sia alta quanto la spic‘ ca dritti del grano verde, e la sua grossezza quanto un ‘ manipolo di grano secco. Noi la mandaremmo a ves‘ tire per li nostri mandatici ambasciadori, e chi la con‘ duranno a noi, e noi incontraremmo alla riva del fiume ‘ grande, facendolo salire suo nostro cocchio. Ella ‘ potra adorare a presso di noi il suo Dio, con venti quattro ‘ altre a sua elezione, e potra cantare con loro come ‘ la tortora alla primavera.

‘ SODISFANDO noi padre e amico nostro questa nostra ‘ brama, farete caggione di unire in perpetua amicitia ‘ cotesti vostri regni d’ Europa al nostra dominante im‘ perio, e si abbracceranno le nostri leggi come l’ edera ‘ abbraccia la pianta, e noi medesemi spargeremo del ‘ nostro seme reale in coteste provincie, riscaldando i ‘ letti di vostri principi con il fuoco amoroso delli nostri ‘ Amazoni, d’ alcune della quali i nostri mandatici am‘ basciadori vi porteranno le somiglianza depinte. V.

‘ confermiamo di tenere in pace le due buone religiose ‘ famiglie delli missionarii, gli’ figlioli d’Ignazio, e li ‘ bianchie neri figlioli di Dominico, il cui configlio degl’ ‘ uni e del’ altrici serve di scorta del nostro regimento, ‘ e di lume ad interpretare le divine legge, come ap-‘ punto fa lume l’oglio che si getta in mare. In tan‘ to alzandozi dal nostro trono per abbracciarvi, vi di‘ chiariamo nostro conguinto e confederato, ed ordini‘ amo che questa foglia sia segnata col nostro segno ‘ imperiale dalla nostra citta, capo del mondo, il quin-‘ to giorno della terza lunatione l’ anno quarto del nos‘ tro imperio.

SIGILLO e un sole, nelle cui faccia e anche quella della luna, ed intorno tra i raggi vi sono traposte alcune spada.

Dico il traduttore, che secondo il ceremoioial di questa lettera e recedentissima specialmente fessere scritta con la penna dello struzzo virgine, con la quelle non fogliosi scrivere quai re che le pregiere a Dio escrivendo a qualche altro a principe del mondo, la maggior finezza che usino, e scrivergli con la pena del pavone.

A letter from the Emperor of China to the Pope, interpreted by a father Jesuit, secretary of the Indies.

To you blessed above the blessed, great emperor of bishops, and pastor of Christians, dispenser of the oil of the kings of Europe, Clement XI.

‘ THE favourite friend of God Gionatta the VII.
 ‘ most powerful above the most powerful of the ‘ earth, highest above the highest under the sun and ‘ moon, who sits on a throne of emerald of China, above ‘ 100 steps of gold, to interpret the language of God
 ‘ to the faithful, and who gives life and death to 115 ‘ kingdoms, and 170 islands; he writes with the quill
 ‘ of a virgin Ostrich, and sends health and increase ‘ of old age.

‘ BEING arrived at the time of our age, in which ‘ the flower of our royal youth ought to ripen into fruit ‘ towards old age, to comfort therewith the desire of ‘ our devoted people, and to propagate the seed of that ‘ plant which must protect them; we have determin‘ ed to accompany ourselves with an high amorous ‘ virgin, suckled at the breast of a wild lioness, and a ‘ meek lamb; and imagining with ourselves that your ‘ European Roman people is the father of many un‘ conquerable and chaste ladies, we stretch out our ‘ powerful arm to embrace one of them, and she shall ‘ be one of your nieces, or the niece of some other great ‘ Latin priest, the darling of God’s right eye. Let ‘ the authority of Sarah be sown in her, the fidelity of ‘ Esther, and the wisdom of Abba. We would have ‘ her eye like that of a dove, which may look upon hea‘ ven and earth, with the mouth of a shell-fish to feed ‘ upon the dew of the morning; her age must not ex‘ ceed 200 courses of the moon; let her stature be equal ‘ to that of an ear of green corn, and her girth a hand‘ ful.

‘ WE will send our Mandarines ambassadors to ‘ clothe her, and to conduct her to us, and we will meet ‘ her on the bank of the great river, making her to ‘ leap up into our chariot. She may with us worship ‘ her own God, together with twenty-four virgins of ‘ her own chusing; and she may sing with them as the ‘ turtle in the spring. You, O father and friend, com‘ plying with this our desire, may be an occasion of u‘ niting in perpetual friendship, our high empire with ‘ your European kingdoms, and we may embrace your ‘ laws, as the ivy embraces the tree; and we ourselves ‘ may scatter our royal blood into your provinces, ‘ warming the chief of your princes with the amorous ‘ fires of our Amazons, the resembling pictures of some of ‘ which our said Mandarines ambassadors shall convey ‘ to you.

‘ WE exhort you to keep in peace two good religi‘ ous families of Missionaries, the black sons of Ignatius,

‘ and the white and black sons of Dominicus; that the ‘ counsel, both of the one and the other, may serve as ‘ a guide to us in our government, and a light to in‘ terpret the divine law, as the oil cast into the sea pro‘ duces light.

‘ To conclude, we rising up in our throne to em‘ brace you, we declare you our ally and confederate;
 ‘ and have ordered this leaf to be sealed with our im‘ perial signet, in our royal city the head of the world, ‘ the 8th day of the third lunation, and the 4th year ‘ of our reign.

LETTERS from Rome say, the whole conversation both among gentlemen and ladies has turned upon the subject of this epistle, ever since it arrived. The Jesuit who translated it says, it loses much of the majesty of the original in the Italian. It seems there was an offer of the same nature made by a predecessor of the present Emperor to Lewis the XIII. of France, but no lady of that court would take the voyage, that sex not being at that time so much used in politic negotiations. The manner of treating the Pope is, according to the Chinese ceremonial, very respectful: for the Emperor writes to him with the quill of a virgin Ostrich, which was never used before but in writing prayers. Instructions are preparing for the lady who shall have so much zeal as to undertake this pilgrimage, and be an empress for the sake of her religion. The principal of the Indian missionaries has given in a list of the reigning sins in China, in order to prepare indulgences necessary to this lady and her retinue, in advancing the interests of the Roman catholic religion in those kingdoms.

To the SPECTATOR-GENERAL.

May it please your Honour,

I HAVE of late seen French hats of a prodigious magnitude pass by my observatory.

T

JOHN SLY.

No. 546. Wednesday, November 26.

Omnia patefacienda, ut ne quid omnino quod venditor norit, emptor ignoret. Tull.

Every thing should be fairly told, that the buyer may not be ignorant of any thing which the seller knows.

IT gives me very great scandal to observe, wherever I go, how much skill, in buying all manner of goods, there is necessary to defend yourself from being cheated in whatever you see exposed to sale. My reading makes such a strong impression upon me, that I should think myself a cheat in my way, if I should translate any thing from another tongue, and not acknowledge it to my readers. I understood from common report, that Mr Cibber was introducing a French play upon our stage, and thought myself concerned to let the town know what was his, and what was foreign. When I came to the rehearsal, I found the house so partial to one of their own fraternity, that they gave every thing which was said such grace, emphasis, and force in their action, that it was no easy matter to make any judgment of the performance. Mrs Oldfield, who, it seems, is the heroic daughter, had so just a conception of her part, that her action made what she spoke appear decent, just, and noble. The passions of terror and compassion, they made me believe, were very artfully raised, and the whole conduct of the play artful and surprising. We authors do not much relish the endeavours of players in this kind; but have the same disdain as physicians and lawyers have when attorneys and apothecaries give advice. Cibber himself took the liberty to tell me, that he expected I would do him justice, and allow the play well prepared for his spectators, whatever it was for his readers. He added very many particulars, not uncurious, concerning the manner of taking an audience, and laying wait not only for their superficial applause, but also for insinuating into their affections and passions, by the artful management of the look, voice and gesture of the speaker. I could not but consent that the heroic daughter appeared in the rehearsal a moving entertainment, wrought out of a great and exemplary virtue.

THE advantages of action, show and dress on these occasions are allowable, because the merit consists in being capable of imposing upon us to our advantage and entertainment. All that I was going to say about the honesty of an author in the sale of his ware, was, that he ought to own all that he had borrowed from others, and lay in a clear light all that he gives his spectators for their money, with an account of the first manufacturers. But I intended to give the lecture of this day upon the common and prostituted behaviour of traders in ordinary commerce. The philosopher made it a rule of trade, that your profit ought to be the common profit; and it is unjust to make any step towards gain, wherein the gain of even those to whom you sell is not also consulted. A man may deceive himself if he thinks fit; but he is no better than a cheat who sells any thing without telling the exceptions against it, as well as what is to be said to its advantage. The scandalous abuse of language and hardening of conscience, which may be observed every day in going from one place to another, is what makes a whole city to an unprejudiced eye a den of thieves. It was no small pleasure to me for this reason to remark, as I passed by Cornhill, that the shop of that worthy, honest, tho' lately unfortunate citizen, Mr John Morton, so well known in the linen trade, is fitting up a new. Since a man has been in a distressed condition, it ought to be a great satisfaction to have passed thro' it in such a manner as not to have lost the friendship of those who suffered with him, but to receive an honourable acknowledgment of his honesty from those very persons to whom the law had consigned his estate.

THE misfortune of this citizen is like to prove of a very general advantage to those who shall deal with him hereafter: for the stock with which he now sets up being the loan of his friends, he cannot expose that to the hazard of giving credit, but enters into a ready-money trade, by which means he will both buy and sell the best and cheapest. He imposes upon himself a rule of affixing the value of each piece he sells to the piece itself; so that the most ignorant servant or child will be as good a buyer at his shop as the most skilful in the trade. For all which, you have all his hopes and fortune for your security. To encourage dealing after this way, there is not only the avoiding the most infamous guilt in ordinary bartering; but this observation, that he who buys with ready money, saves as much to his family, as the state exacts out of his land for the security and service of his country; that is to say, in plain English, sixteen will do as much as twenty shillings.

MR SPECTATOR,

MY heart is so swelled with grateful sentiments on account of some favours which I have lately received, that I must beg leave to give them utterance amongst the croud of other anonymous correspondents; and writing, I hope, will be as great a relief to my forced silence, as it is to your natural taciturnity.—My generous benefactor will not suffer me to speak to him in any terms of acknowledgment, but ever treats me as if he had the greatest obligations, and uses me with a distinction that is not to be expected from one so much my superior in fortune, years, and understanding. He insinuates, as if I had a certain right to his favours from some merit, which his particular indulgence to me has discovered; but that is only a beautiful artifice to lessen the pain.

‘ an honest mind feels in receiving obligations, when ‘ there is no probability of returning them.

‘ A GIFT is doubled when accompanied with such ‘ a delicacy of address; but what to me gives it an ‘ inexpressible value, is its coming from the man I most ‘ esteem in the world. It pleases me indeed, as it is ‘ an advantage and addition to my fortune; but when ‘ I consider it as an instance of that good man’s friend‘ ship, it overjoys, it transports me; I look on it with ‘ a lover’s eye, and no longer regard the gift, but the ‘ hand that gave it. For my friendship is so intirely ‘ void of any gainful views, that it often gives me pain ‘ to think it should have been chargeable to him; and ‘ I cannot at some melancholy hours help doing his ‘ generosity the injury of fearing it should cool on this ‘ account, and that the last favour might be a sort of ‘ legacy of a departing friendship.

‘ I CONFESS these fears seem very groundless and ‘ unjust, but you must forgive them to the apprehensi‘ on of one possessed of a great treasure, who is frightened ‘ at the most distant shadow of danger.

‘ SINCE I have thus far opened my heart to you, I ‘ will not conceal the secret satisfaction I feel there of ‘ knowing the goodness of my friend will not be un‘ rewarded. I am pleased with thinking the providence ‘ of the Almighty hath sufficient blessings in store for ‘ him, and will certainly discharge the debt, tho’ I am ‘ not made the happy instrument of doing it.

‘ HOWEVER, nothing in my power shall be wanting ‘ to shew my gratitude; I will make it the business of ‘ my life to thank him, and shall esteem (next to him) ‘ those my best friends who give me the greatest assis‘ tance in this good work. Printing this letter would ‘ be some little instance of my gratitude; and your ‘ favour herein will very much oblige

T Your most humble servant, &c.

Nov. 24.

T

W. C.

No. 547. Thursday, November 27.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

*Si vulnus tibi, monstrata radice vel herba Non fieret levius, fugeres radice vel herba Proficiente nihil curarier—*HOR. Ep. 2. l. 2. v. 149.

*If you were wounded, and your sores imbib'd
No soothing ease from roots or herbs prescrib'd,
You would avoid such medicines, besure,
As roots and herbs, that could effect no cure.*

FRANCIS.

IT is very difficult to praise a man without putting him out of countenance. My following correspondent has found out this uncommon art, and, together with his friends, has celebrated some of my speculations after such a concealed but diverting manner, that if any of my readers think I am to blame in publishing my own commendations, they will allow I should have deserved their censure as much, had I suppressed the humour in which they are conveyed to me.

S I R,

I AM often in a private assembly of wits of both sexes, where we generally descant upon your speculations, or upon the subjects on which you have treated. We were last Tuesday talking of those two volumes which you have lately published. Some were commending one of your papers, and some another; and there was scarce a single person in the company that had not a favourite speculation. Upon this a man of wit and learning told us, he thought it would not be amiss, if we paid the SPECTATOR the same compliment that is often made in our public prints to Sir William Read, Dr Grant, Mr Moor

' the apothecary, and other eminent physicians, where ' it is usual for the patients to publish the cures which ' have been made upon them, and the several distem-
 ' pers under which they laboured. The proposal
 ' took, and the lady where we visited having the two
 ' last volumes in large paper interleaved for her own
 ' private use, ordered them to be brought down, and
 ' laid in the window, whither every one in the com' pany retired, and writ down a particular advertise' ment in the stile and phrase of the like ingenious ' compositions which we frequently meet with at the ' end of our news-papers. When we had finished our ' work, we read them with a great deal of mirth at
 ' the fire-side, and agreed, nemine contradicente, to get ' them transcribed, and sent to the SPECTATOR. The ' gentleman who made the proposal entered the fol' lowing advertisement before the title-page, after ' which the rest succeeded in order.

' REMEDIUM efficax et universum; or, an effec' tual remedy adapted to all capacities; shewing how ' any person may cure himself of ill-nature, pride,
 ' party-spleen, or any other distemper incident to the ' human system, with an easy way to know when the ' infection is upon him. This panacea is as innocent
 ' as bread, agreeable to the taste, and requires no con' finement. It has not its equal in the universe, as a' bundance of the nobility and gentry throughout the ' kingdom have experienced.

N. B. ' No family ought to be without it.

Over the two Spectators on jealousy, being the two first in the third volume.

' I WILLIAM CRAZY, aged threescore and seven,
 ' having been for several years afflicted with uneasy
 ' doubts, fears and vapours, occasioned by the youth
 ' and beauty of Mary my wife, aged twenty-five, do
 ' hereby for the benefit of the public give notice, that ‘ I have found great relief from the two following doses, having taken them two mornings together with a dish of chocolate. Witness my hand, &c.

For the benefit of the poor.

‘ IN charity to such as are troubled with the disease of levee hunting, and are forced to seek their bread every morning at the chamber-doors of great men, I A. B. do testify, that for many years past I laboured under this fashionable distemper, but was cured of it by a remedy which I bought of Mrs Baldwin, contained in a half sheet of paper, marked No. 193, where any one may be provided with the same remedy at the price of a single penny.

‘ AN infallible cure for Hypochondriac Melancholy, No. 173, 184, 191, 203, 209, 221, 233, 235, 239, 245, 247, 251.

Probatum est

CHARLES EASY.

‘ I CHRISTOPHER QUERY, having been troubled with a certain distemper in my tongue, which shewed itself in impertinent and superfluous interrogatories, have not asked one unnecessary question since my perusal of the prescription marked No. 228.

‘ The Britannic Beautifier, being an essay on modesty, No. 231, which gives such a delightful blushing colour to the cheeks of those that are white or pale, that it is not to be distinguished from a natural fine complexion, nor perceived to be artificial by the nearest friend; is nothing of paint, or in the least hurtful. It renders the face delightfully handsome; is not subject to be rubbed off, and cannot be paralleled by either wash, powder, cosmetic, &c. It is certainly the best beautifier in the world.

MARTHA GLOWORM.

‘ I SAMUEL SELF, of the parish of St James’s, having a constitution which naturally abounds with a‘ cids, made use of a paper of directions, marked No.

‘ 177, recommending a healthful exercise called good- ‘ nature, and have found it a most excellent sweetener ‘ of the blood.

‘ WHEREAS I, ELISABETH RAINBOW, was troubled ‘ with that distemper in my head, which about a year ‘ ago was pretty epidemical among the ladies, and dis‘ covered itself in the colour of their hoods, having ‘ made use of the doctor’s cephalic tincture, which he ‘ exhibited to the public in one of his last year’s pa‘ pers, I recovered in a very few days.

‘ I GEORGE GLOOM, having for a long time been ‘ troubled with the spleen, and being advised by my ‘ friends to put myself into a course of Steele, did for ‘ that end make use of remedies conveyed to me seve‘ ral mornings, in short letters, from the hands of the ‘ invisible doctor. They were marked at the bottom, ‘ Nathaniel Henroost, Alice Threadneedle, Rebecca ‘ Nettletop, Tom Loveless, Mary Meanwell, Thomas ‘ Smoaky, Anthony Freeman, Tom Meggot, Rustick
‘ Sprightly, &c. which have had so good an effect up‘ on me, that I now find myself chearful, lightsome ‘ and easy; and therefore do recommend them to all ‘ such as labour under the same distemper.

Not having room to insert all the advertisements which were sent me, I have only picked out some few from the third volume, reserving the fourth for another opportunity. ○

No 548. Friday, November 28.

—Vitiis nemo sine nascitur, optimus ille

Qui minimis urgetur— HOR. Sat. 3. l. 1. v. 68.

For we have all our vices, and the best

Is he, who with the fewest is oppress'd. FRANCIS.

Mr SPECTATOR,

Nov. 27. 1712.

I HAVE read this day's paper with a great deal of pleasure, and could send you an account of several elixirs and antidotes in your third volume, which your correspondents have not taken notice of in their advertisements; and at the same time must own to you, that I have seldom seen a shop furnished with such a variety of medicaments, and in which there are fewer soporifics. The several vehicles you have invented for conveying your unacceptable truths to us, are what I most particularly admire, as I am afraid they are secrets which will die with you. I do not find that any of your critical essays are taken notice of in this paper, notwithstanding I look upon them to be excellent cleansers of the brain, and could venture to superscribe them with an advertisement which I have lately seen in one of our news-papers, wherein there is an account given of a sovereign remedy for restoring the taste of all such persons whose palates have been vitiated by distempers, unwholesome food, or any the like occasions. But to let fall the allusion, notwithstanding your criticisms, and particularly the candour which you have discovered in them, are not the least taking part of your works; I find your opinion concerning poetical justice, as it is expressed in the first part of your fortieth Spectator, is controverted by some eminent critics; and as you now seem, to our great grief of heart, to be winding up your bottoms, I hoped you would have enlarged a little upon that subject. It is indeed but a single paragraph in your works, and I believe those who have read it with the same attention I have done, will think there is nothing to be objected against it. I have however drawn up some additional arguments to strengthen the opinion which you have there delivered, having endeavoured to go to the bottom of that matter, which you may either publish or suppress as you think fit.

‘ HORACE in my motto says, that all men are vicious, and that they differ from one another, only as they are more or less so. Boileau has given the same account of our wisdom as Horace has of our virtue.

Tous les hommes sont fous, et malgre tous leurs soins, Ne different entre eux, que du plus et du moins.

All men, says he, are fools, and in spite of their endeavours to the contrary, differ from one another only as they are more or less so.

‘ Two or three of the old Greek poets have given the same turn to a sentence which describes the happiness of man in this life ;

Τὸ ζῆν ἀλυπως ἀνδρὸς ἐστὶν εὐτυχῆς.

That man is most happy who is the least miserable
‘ It will not perhaps be unentertaining to the polite reader to observe how these three beautiful sentences are formed upon different subjects by the same way of thinking ; but I shall return to the first of them.

‘ OUR goodness being of a comparative, and not an absolute nature, there is none who in strictness can be called a virtuous man. Every one has in him a natural alloy, though one may be fuller of dross than another : for this reason I cannot think it right to introduce a perfect or a faultless man upon the stage : not only because such a character is improper to move compassion, but because there is no such thing in nature. This might probably be one reason why the

‘ Spectator in one of his papers took notice of that ‘ late invented term called poetical justice, and the ‘ wrong notions into which it has led some tragic writ‘ ers. The most perfect man has vices enough to draw ‘ down punishments upon his head, and to justify Pro‘ vidence in regard to any miseries that may befall him.
‘ For this reason I cannot think, but that the instruc‘ tion and moral are much finer, where a man who is ‘ virtuous in the main of his character falls into di‘ stress, and sinks under the blows of fortune at the ‘ end of a tragedy, than when he is represented as hap‘ py and triumphant. Such an example corrects the ‘ insolence of human nature, softens the mind of the ‘ beholder with sentiments of pity and compassion, ‘ comforts him under his own private affliction, and ‘ teaches him not to judge of men’s virtues by their ‘ successes. I cannot think of one real hero in all an‘ tiquity so far raised above human infirmities, that ‘ he might not be very naturally represented in a tra‘ gedy as plunged in misfortunes and calamities. The ‘ poet may still find out some prevailing passion or in-‘ discretion in his character, and shew it in such a man‘ ner, as will sufficiently acquit the gods of any inju‘ stice in his sufferings. For, as Horace observes in ‘ my text, the best man is faulty, though not in so ‘ great a degree as those whom we generally call vi‘ cious men.

‘ IF such a strict poetical justice, as some gentlemen ‘ insist upon, was to be observed in this art, there is ‘ no manner of reason why it should not extend to he‘ roic poetry, as well as tragedy. But we find it so ‘ little observed in Homer, that his Achilles is placed ‘ in the greatest point of glory and success, though his ‘ character is morally vicious and only poetically good, ‘ if I may use the phrase of our modern critics. The ‘ Æneid is filled with innocent, unhappy persons. Ni-‘ fus and Euryalus, Lausus and Pallas, come all to un‘ fortunate ends. The poet takes notice in particu‘ lar, that in the sacking of Troy, Ripheus fell, who ‘ was the most just man among the Trojans,

—Cadit et Ripheus, justissimus unus

Qui fuit in Teucris, et servantissimus æqui :

Diis aliter visum est.

Æn. 2. v. 427.

‘ And that Pantheus could neither be preserved by his ‘ transcendent piety, nor by the holy fillets of Apollo, ‘ whose priest he was.

—nec te tua plurima, Pantheu,

Labeniam pietas, nec Apollinis insula texit.

Ibid. v. 429.

‘ I might here mention the practice of ancient tragic ‘ poets, both Greek and Latin ; but as this particular ‘ is touched upon in the paper above-mentioned, I ‘ shall pass it over in silence. I could produce passages ‘ out of Aristotle in favour of my opinion, and if in one ‘ place he says that an absolutely virtuous man should ‘ not be represented as unhappy, this does not justify ‘ any one who should think fit to bring in an absolute‘ ly virtuous man upon the stage. Those who are ‘ acquainted with that author’s way of writing, know ‘ very well, that to take the whole extent of his sub‘ ject into his divisions of it, he often makes use of ‘ such cases as are imaginary, and not reduceable to ‘ practice : he himself declares that such tragedies as ‘ ended unhappily bore away the prize in theatrical ‘ contentions from those which ended happily ; and ‘ for the fortieth speculation, which I am now confi‘ dering, as it has given reasons why these are more ‘ apt to please an audience, so it only proves that ‘ these are generally preferable to the other, though ‘ at the same time it affirms that many excellent tra‘ gedies have and may be written in both kinds.

‘ I SHALL conclude with observing, that though ‘ the Spectator above-mentioned is so far against the ‘ rule of poetical justice, as to affirm that good men in this series of thought by a discourse which I had last week with my worthy friend Sir ANDREW FREEMPORT, a man of so much natural eloquence, good sense, and probity of mind, that I always hear him with a particular pleasure. As we were sitting together, being the sole remaining members of our club, Sir ANDREW gave me an account of the many busy scenes of life in which he had been engaged, and at the same time reckoned up to me abundance of those lucky hits which at another time he would have called pieces of good fortune; but in the temper of mind he was then, he termed them mercies, favours of Providence, and blessings upon an honest industry. Now, says he, you must know, my good friend, I am so used to consider myself as creditor and debtor, that I often state my accounts after the same manner with regard to heaven and my own soul. In this case, when I look upon the debtor-side, I find such innumerable articles, that I want arithmetic to cast them up; but when I look upon the creditor-side, I find little more than blank paper. Now, though I am very well satisfied that it is not in my power to balance accounts with my Maker, I am resolved however to turn all my future endeavours that way. You must not therefore be surprised, my friend, if you hear that I am betaking myself to a more thoughtful kind of life, and if I meet you no more in this place.

I COULD not but approve so good a resolution, notwithstanding the loss I shall suffer by it. Sir ANDREW has since explained himself to me more at large in the following letter, which is just come to my hands.

Good Mr SPECTATOR,

‘ NOTWITHSTANDING my friends at the club have ‘ always rallied me, when I have talked of re‘ tiring from business, and repeated to me one of my ‘ own sayings, That a merchant has never enough till ‘ he has got a little more; I can now inform you, that ‘ there is one in the world who thinks he has enough, ‘ and is determined to pass the remainder of his life in ‘ the enjoyment of what he has. You know me so ‘ well, that I need not tell you, I mean, by the enjoy‘ ment of my possessions, the making of them useful ‘ to the public. As the greatest part of my estate has ‘ been hitherto of an unsteady and volatile nature, ei‘ ther tossed upon seas, or fluctuating in funds; it is ‘ now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tene‘ ments. I have removed it from the uncertainty of ‘ stocks, winds and waves, and disposed of it in a con‘ siderable purchase. This will give me great oppor‘ tunity of being charitable in my way, that is, in set‘ ting my poor neighbours to work, and giving them ‘ a comfortable subsistence out of their own industry.

‘ My gardens, my fish-ponds, my arable and pasture-‘ grounds, shall be my several hospitals, or rather ‘ work-houses, in which I propose to maintain a great ‘ many indigent persons, who are now starving in my ‘ neighbourhood. I have got a fine spread of im-‘ proveable lands, and in my own thoughts am alrea‘ dy plowing up some of them, fencing others; plant‘ ing woods, and draining marshes. In fine, as I have ‘ my share in the surface of this island, I am resolved ‘ to make it as beautiful a spot as any in her Majesty’s ‘ dominions; at least there is not an inch of it which ‘ shall not be cultivated to the best advantage, and do ‘ its utmost for its owner. As in my mercantile em‘ ployment I so disposed of my affairs, that from what‘ ever corner of the compass the wind blew, it was ‘ bringing home one or other of my ships; I hope, as ‘ a husbandman, to contrive it so, that not a shower ‘ of rain, or a glimpse of sun-shine, shall fall upon my ‘ estate without bettering some part of it, and contri‘ buting to the products of the season. You know it ‘ has been hitherto my opinion of life, that it is thrown ‘ away when it is not some way useful to others. But ‘ when I am riding out by myself, in the fresh air on the open heath that lies by my house, I find several other thoughts growing up in me. I am now of opinion, that a man of my age may find business enough on himself, by setting his mind in order, preparing it for another world, and reconciling it to the thoughts of death. I must therefore acquaint you, that besides those usual methods of charity, of which I have before spoken, I am at this very instant finding out a convenient place where I may build an alms-house, which I intend to endow very handsomely, for a dozen superannuated husbandmen. It will be a great pleasure to me to say my prayers twice a day with men of my own years, who all of them, as well as myself, may have their thoughts taken up how they shall die, rather than how they shall live. I remember an excellent saying that I learnt at school, Finis coronat opus: you know best whether it be in Virgil or in Horace, it is my business to apply it. If your affairs will permit you to take the country air with me sometimes, you shall find an apartment fitted up for you, and shall be every day entertained with beef or mutton of my own feeding; fish out of my own ponds; and fruit out of my own gardens. You shall have free egress and regress about my house, without having any questions asked you; and, in a word, such an hearty welcome as you may expect from

Your most sincere friend, and humble servant,

ANDREW FREEPORT.

THE club of which I am a member, being entirely dispersed, I shall consult my reader next week upon a project relating to the institution of a new one. O

No. 550. Monday, December 1.

[By Mr ADDISON.]

Quid dignum tanto feret hic promissor hiatu?

HOR. Ars poet. v. 138.

How will the boaster hold this yawning rate?

FRANCIS.

SINCE the late dissolution of the club, whereof I have often declared myself a member, there are very many persons, who by letters, petitions, and recommendations, put up for the next election. At the same time I must complain, that several indirect and underhand practices have been made use of upon this occasion. A certain country gentleman began to tap upon the first information he received of Sir ROGER'S death; when he sent me up word, that if I would get him chosen in the place of the deceased, he would present me with a barrel of the best October I had ever drank in my life. The ladies are in great pain to know whom I intend to elect in the room of WILL HONEYCOMB. Some of them indeed are of opinion that Mr HONEYCOMB did not take sufficient care of their interests in the club, and are therefore desirous of having in it hereafter a representative of their own sex. A citizen who subscribes himself Y. Z. tells me, that he has one and twenty shares in the African company, and offers to bribe me with the odd one in case he may succeed Sir ANDREW FREEPORT, which he thinks would raise the credit of that fund. I have several letters, dated from Jenny Man's, by gentlemen who are candidates for Captain SENTRY'S place, and as many from a coffee-house in Paul's church-yard, of such who would fill up the vacancy occasioned by the death of my worthy friend the clergyman, whom I can never mention but with a particular respect.

HAVING maturely weighed these several particulars, with the many remonstrances that have been made to me on this subject, and considering how invidious an office I shall take upon me, if I make the whole election depend upon my single voice, and being unwilling to expose myself to those clamours which, on such an occasion, will not fail to be raised against me for partiality, injustice, corruption, and other qualities which my nature abhors, I have formed to myself the project of a club as follows.

I HAVE thoughts of issuing out writs to all and every of the clubs that are established in the cities of London and Westminster, requiring them to chuse out of their respective bodies a person of the greatest merit, and to return his name to me before Lady-day, at which time I intend to sit upon business.

By this means I may have reason to hope, that the club over which I shall preside, will be the very flower and quintessence of all other clubs. I have communicated this my project to none but a particular friend of mine, whom I have celebrated twice or thrice for his happiness in that kind of wit which is commonly known by the name of a pun. The only objection he makes to it is, that I shall raise up enemies to myself if I act with so regal an air, and that my detractors, instead of giving me the usual title of SPECTATOR, will be apt to call me the King of Clubs.

BUT to proceed on my intended project: it is very well known that I at first set forth in this work with the character of a silent man; and I think I have so well preserved my taciturnity, that I do not remember to have violated it with three sentences in the space of almost two years. As a monosyllable is my delight, I have made very few excursions in the conversations which I have related, beyond a yes or a no. By this means my readers have lost many good things which I have had in my heart, though I did not care for uttering them.

Now, in order to diversify my character, and to shew the world how well I can talk if I have a mind, I have thoughts of being very loquacious in the club which I have now under consideration. But that I may proceed the more regularly in this affair, I design upon the first meeting of the said club, to have my mouth opened in form; intending to regulate myself in this particular by a certain ritual which I have by me, that contains all the ceremonies which are practised at the opening the mouth of a Cardinal. I have likewise examined the forms which were used of old by Pythagoras, when any of his scholars, after an apprenticeship of silence, was made free of his speech. In the mean time, as I have of late found my name in foreign gazettes upon less occasions, I question not but in their next articles from Great Britain, they will inform the world that the SPECTATOR's mouth is to be opened on the twenty-fifth of March next. I may perhaps publish a very useful paper at that time of the proceedings in that solemnity, and of the persons who shall assist at it. But of this more hereafter. O

No. 551. Tuesday, December 2.

Sic honor et nomen divinis vatibus atque

Carminibus venit.—— HOR. Ars Poet. v. 400.

In verse the oracles divine were heard,

And nature's secret laws in verse declar'd.

FRANCIS.

Mr SPECTATOR,

WHEN men of worthy and excelling geniuses have obliged the world with beautiful and instructive writings, it is the nature of gratitude that praise should be returned them, as one proper consequent reward of their performances. Nor has mankind ever been so degenerately sunk, but they have made this return, and even when they have not been wrought up by the generous endeavour so as to receive the advantage designed by it. This praise, which arises first in the mouth of particular persons, spreads and lasts according to the merit of authors; and when it thus meets with a full success, changes its denomination, and is called Fame. They who have happily arrived at this, are even, while they live, inflamed by the acknowledgments of others, and spurred on to new undertakings for the benefit of mankind, notwithstanding the detraction which some abject tempers would cast upon them: but when they decease, their characters being freed from the shadow which Envy laid them under, begin to shine out with greater splendor; their spirits survive in their works; they are admitted into the highest companies, and they continue pleasing and instructing posterity from age to age. Some of the best gain a character, by being able to shew that they are no strangers to them; and others obtain a new warmth to labour for the happiness and ease of mankind, from a reflexion upon those honours which are paid to their memories.

THE thought of this took me up as I turned over those epigrams which are the remains of several of the wits of Greece, and perceived many dedicated to the fame of those who had excelled in beautiful poetic performances. Wherefore, in pursuance to my thought, I concluded to do something along with them to bring their praises into a new light and language, for the encouragement of those whose modest tempers may be deterred by the fear of envy or detraction from fair attempts, to which their parts might render them equal. You will perceive them as they follow to be conceived in the form of epitaphs, a sort of writing which is wholly set apart for a short pointed method of praise.

On Orpheus, written by Antipater.

No longer, Orpheus, shall thy sacred strains
Lead stones and trees, and beasts along the plains;
Nor longer soothe the boisterous winds to sleep,
Or still the billows of the raging deep:
For thou art gone, the muses mourn'd thy fall
In solemn strains, thy mother most of all.
Ye mortals, idly for your sons ye moan,
If thus a goddess could not save her own.

OBSERVE here, that if we take the fable for granted, as it was believed to be in that age when the epigram was written, the turn appears to have piety to the gods, and a resigning spirit in its application. But if we consider the point with respect to our present knowledge, it will be less esteemed; though the author himself, because he believed it, may still be more valued than any one who should now write with a point of the same nature.

On Homer, by Alpheus of Mytilene.

Still in our ears Andromache complains,
And still in sight the fate of Troy remains;
Still Ajax fights, still Hector's dragg'd along,
Such strange enchantment dwells in Homer's song;
Whose birth could more than one poor realm adorn,
For all the world is proud that he was born.

THE thought in the first part of this is natural, and depending upon the force of poesy: in the latter part it looks as if it would aim at the history of seven towns contending for the honour of Homer's birth-place; but when you expect to meet with that common story, the poet slides by, and raises the whole world for a kind of arbiter, which is to end the contention amongst its several parts.

On Anacreon, by Antipater.

This tomb be thine, Anacreon; all around
Let ivy wreathes, let flow'rets deck the ground,
And from its earth, enrich'd with such a prize,
Let wells of milk and streams of wine arise:
So will thine ashes yet a pleasure know,
If any pleasure reach the shades below.

THE poet here written upon, is an easy gay author, and he who writes upon him has filled his own head with the character of his subject. He seems to love his theme so much, that he thinks of nothing but pleasing him as if he were still alive, by entering into his libertine spirit; so that the humour is easy and gay, resembling Anacreon in its air, raised by such images, and pointed with such a turn as he might have used. I give it a place here, because the author may have designed it for his honour; and I take an opportunity from it to advise others, that when they would praise, they cautiously avoid every looser qualification, and fix only where there is a real foundation in merit.

On Euripides, by Ion.

Divine Euripides, this tomb we see
So fair, is not a monument for thee,
So much as thou for it, since all will own
Thy name and lasting praise adorn the stone.

THE thought here is fine; but its fault is, that it is general, that it may belong to any great man, because it points out no particular character. It would be better, if when we light upon such a turn, we join it with something that circumscribes and bounds it to the qualities of our subject. He who gives his praise in gross, will often appear either to have been a stranger to those he writes upon, or not to have found any thing in them which is praise-worthy.

On Sophocles, by Simonides.

Wind, gentle ever-green, to form a shade
Around the tomb where Sophocles is laid;
Sweet ivy wind thy boughs, and intertwine
With blushing roses and the clust'ring vine;
Thus will thy lasting leaves, with beauties hung,
Prove grateful emblems of the lays he sung:
Whose soul exalted like a god of wit,
Among the Muses and the Graces writ.

THIS epigram I have opened more than any of the former: the thought towards the latter end seemed closer couched, so as to require explication. I fancied the poet aimed at the picture which is generally made of Apollo and the Muses, he sitting with his harp in the middle, and they around him. This looked beautiful to my thought, and because the image arose before me out of the words of the original as I was reading it, I ventured to explain them so.

On Menander, the author unnamed.

The very bees, O sweet Menander, hung
To taste the Muses spring upon thy tongue;
The very Graces made the scenes ye writ
Their happy point of fine expression hit.
Thus still you live, you make your Athens shine,
And raise its glory to the skies in thine.

THIS epigram has a respect to the character of its subject; for Menander writ remarkably with a justness and purity of language. It has also told the country he was born in, without either a set, or a hidden manner, while it twists together the glory of the poet and his nation, so as to make the nation depend upon his for an increase of its own.

I WILL offer no more instances at present, to shew that they who deserve praise have it returned them from different ages. Let these which have been laid down, shew men that envy will not always prevail. And to the end that writers may more successfully enliven the endeavours of one another, let them consider, in some such manner as I have attempted, what may be the justest spirit and art of praise. It is indeed very hard to come up to it. Our praise is trifling when it depends upon a fable; it is false when it depends upon wrong qualifications; it means nothing when it is general; it is extremely difficult to hit when we propose to raise characters high, while we keep to them justly. I shall end this with transcribing that excellent epitaph of Mr Cowley, wherein, with a kind of grave and philosophic humour, he very beautifully speaks of himself (withdrawn from the world, and dead to all the interests of it) as of a man really deceased. At the same time it is an instruction how to leave the public with a good grace.

Epitaphium vivi authoris.

Hic, O viator, sub Lare parvulo
 Couleius hic est conditus, hic jacet.
 Defunctus humani laboris
 Sorte, supervacuaque vita;
 Non indecora pauperie nitens,
 Et non inertis nobilis otio,
 Vanoque dilectis popello
 Divitiis animosus hostis.
 Possis ut illum dicere mortuum,
 En terra jam nunc quantula sufficit!
 Exempta sit curis, viator,
 Terra sit illa levis, precare.
 Hic sparge flores, sparge breves rosas,

Nam vita gaudet mortua floribus,
 Herbisque odoratis corona
 Vatis adhuc cinerem calentem.

The living Author's Epitaph.

From life's superfluous cares enlarg'd,
 His debt of human toil discharg'd,
 Here Cowley lies, beneath this shade,
 To ev'ry worldly interest dead:
 With decent poverty content;
 His hours of ease not idly spent;
 To fortune's goods a foe profess'd,
 And hating wealth, by all caref'd.
 'Tis sure he's dead; for, lo! how small
 A spot of earth is now his all!
 O! wish that earth may lightly lay,
 And every care be far away!
 Bring flow'rs, the short-liv'd roses bring,
 To life deceas'd fit offering!
 And sweets around the poet strow,
 Whilst yet with life his ashes glow.

THE publication of these criticisms having procured me the following letter from a very ingenious gentleman, I cannot forbear inserting it in the volume, tho' it did not come soon enough to have a place in any of my single papers.

Mr SPECTATOR,

HAVING read over in your paper, No. 551, some of the epigrams made by the Grecian wits, in commendation of their celebrated poets, I could not forbear sending you another, out of the same collection; which I take to be as great a compliment to Homer, as any that has yet been paid him,

Τίς ποθ' ὁ τον Τροίης πόλεμον, &c.

Who first transcrib'd the famous Trojan war,
 And wife Ulysses's acts, O Jove, make known:
 For since 'tis certain, thine those poems are,
 No more let Homer boast they are his own.

' If you think it worthy of a place in your speculations, for aught I know (by that means) it may in time be printed as often in English, as it has already been in Greek. I am (like the rest of the world)

S. I. R.,

4th Dec.

Your great admirer,

G. R.

THE reader may observe that the beauty of this epigram is different from that of any in the foregoing. An irony is looked upon as the finest palliative of praise; and very often conveys the noblest panegyric under the appearance of satire. Homer is here seemingly accused and treated as a plagiarist; but what is drawn up in the form of an accusation is certainly, as my correspondent observes, the greatest compliment that could have been paid to that divine poet.

Dear Mr SPECTATOR,

' I AM a gentleman of a pretty good fortune, and of a temper impatient of any thing which I think an injury; however, I always quarrell'd according to law, and instead of attacking my adversary by the dangerous method of sword and pistol, I made my assaults by that more secure one of writ or warrant. I cannot help telling you, that either by the justice of my causes, or the superiority of my counsel, I have been generally successful; and to my great satisfaction I can say it, that by three actions of slander, and half a dozen of trespasses, I have for several years enjoyed a perfect tranquillity in my reputation and estate. By these means also I have been made known ‘ to the judges ; the serjeants of our circuit are my in‘ timate friends, and the ornamental counsel pay a ve‘ ry profound respect to one who has made so great a ‘ figure in the law. Affairs of consequence having ‘ brought me to town, I had the curiosity t’other day ‘ to visit Westminster-hall ; and having placed myself ‘ in one of the courts, expected to be most agreeably ‘ entertained. After the court and counsel were, with ‘ due ceremony, seated, up stands a learned gentle‘ man and began, When this matter was last stirred be‘ fore your lordship ; the next humbly moved to quash ‘ an indictment ; another complained that his adver‘ sary had snapped a judgment ; the next informed ‘ the court that his client was stripped of his posses‘ sion ; another begged leave to acquaint his lordship ‘ they had been saddled with costs. At last up got a ‘ grave serjeant, and told us his client had been hung ‘ up a whole term by a writ of error. At this I could ‘ bear it no longer, but came hither, and resolved to ‘ apply myself to your honour to interpose with these ‘ gentlemen, that they would leave off such low and ‘ unnatural expressions : for surely though the lawy‘ ers subscribe to hideous French and false Latin, yet ‘ they should let their clients have a little decent and ‘ proper English for their money. What man that ‘ has a value for a good name would like to have it ‘ said in a public court, that Mr Such-a-one was strip‘ ped, saddled, or hung up ? This being what has e‘ scaped your Spectatorial observation, be pleased to ‘ correct such an illiberal cant among professed speak‘ ers, and you’ll infinitely oblige

Your humble servant,

Joe’s coffeehouse,

Nov. 28.

PHILONICUS

No. 552. Wednesday, December 3.

————— Qui prægravat artes

Infra se positas, extinctus amabitur idem,

HOR. Ep. 1. l. 2. v. 13.

————— Yet, when dead, shall prove

An object worthy of esteem and love.

FRANCIS.

AS I was tumbling about the town the other day in a hackney-coach, and delighting myself with busy scenes in the shops on each side of me, it came into my head with no small remorse, that I had not been frequent enough in the mention and recommendation of the industrious part of mankind. It very naturally upon this occasion, touched my conscience in particular, that I had not acquitted myself to my friend Mr Peter Motteux. That industrious man of trade, and formerly brother of the quill, has dedicated to me a poem upon tea. It would injure him, as a man of business, if I did not let the world know that the author of so good verses writ them before he was concerned in traffic. In order to expiate my negligence towards him, I immediately resolved to make him a visit. I found his spacious ware-houses filled and adorned with tea, China, and Indian ware. I could observe a beautiful ordonnance of the whole; and such different and considerable branches of trade carried on, in the same house, I exulted in seeing disposed by a poetical head. In one place were exposed to view silks of various shades and colours, rich brocades, and the wealthiest product of foreign looms. Here you might see the finest laces held up by the fairest hands; and there examined by the beauteous eyes of the buyers the most delicate cambrics, muslins, and linens. I could not but congratulate my friend on the humble, but, I hoped, beneficial use he had made of his talents, and wished I could be a patron to his trade, as he had been pleased to make me of his poetry. The honest man has, I know, that modest desire of gain which is peculiar to those who understand better things than riches; and I dare say he would be contented with much less than what is called wealth in that quarter of the town which he inhabits, and will oblige all his customers with demands agreeable to the moderation of his desires.

AMONG other omissions, of which I have been also guilty, with relation to men of industry of a superior order, I must acknowledge my silence towards a proposal frequently inclosed to me by Mr Renatus Harris, organ-builder. The ambition of this artificer is to erect an organ in St Paul's cathedral, over the west-door, at the entrance into the body of the church, which in art and magnificence shall transcend any work of that kind before invented. The proposal in perspicuous language sets forth the honour and advantage such a performance would be to the British name, as well as that it would apply the power of sounds, in a manner more amazingly forcible than, perhaps, has yet been known, and I am sure to an end much more worthy. Had the vast sums which have been laid out upon operas without skill or conduct, and to no other purpose, but to suspend or vitiate our understandings, been disposed this way, we should now perhaps have an engine so formed as to strike the minds of half a people at once, in a place of worship, with a forgetfulness of present care and calamity, and hope of endless rapture, joy and hallelujah hereafter.

WHEN I am doing this justice, I am not to forget the best mechanic of my acquaintance, that useful servant to science and knowledge, Mr John Rowley; but I think I lay a great obligation on the public by acquainting them with his proposals for a pair of new globes. After his preamble, he promises in the said proposals, that,

In the Celestial Globe.

CARE shall be taken that the fixed stars be placed according to the true longitude and latitude, from the many and correct observations of Hevelius, Cassini, Mr Flamsteed, reg astronomer, Dr Hally, Savilian professor of geometry in Oxon; and from whatever else can be procured to render the globe more exact, instructive and useful.

THAT all the constellations be drawn in a curious, new, and particular manner; each star in so just, distinct, and conspicuous a proportion, that its true magnitude may be readily known by bare inspection, according to the different light and sizes of the stars. That the track or way of such comets as have been well observed, but not hitherto expressed in any globe, be carefully delineated in this.

In the Terrestrial Globe.

THAT by reason the descriptions formerly made, both in the English and Dutch great globe, are erroneous, Asia, Africa, and America, be drawn in a manner wholly new; by which means it is to be noted that the undertakers will be obliged to alter the latitude of some places in ten degrees, the longitude of others in twenty degrees; besides which great and necessary alterations, there be many remarkable countries, cities, towns, rivers, and lakes, omitted in other globes, inserted here according to the best discoveries made by our late navigators. Lastly, that the course of the trade winds, the Monsoons, and other winds periodically shifting between the tropics, be visibly expressed.

Now, in regard that this undertaking is of so universal use, as the advancement of the most necessary parts of the mathematics, as well as tending to the

‘ honour of the British nation, and that the charge of ‘ carrying it on is very expenfive; it is desired that all ‘ gentlemen who are willing to promote so great a work, ‘ will be pleased to subscribe on the following condi‘ tions.

‘ I. THE undertakers engage to furnish each sub‘ scriber with a celestial and terrestrial globe, each of ‘ thirty inches diameter, in all respects curiously a‘ dorned, the stars gilded, the capital cities plainly dis‘ tinguished, the frames, meridians, horizons, hour ‘ circles and indexes so exactly finished up, and accu‘ rately divided, that a pair of these globes will real‘ ly appear, in the judgment of any disinterested and ‘ intelligent person, worth fifteen pounds more than ‘ will be demanded for them by the undertakers.

‘ II. WHOSOEVER will be pleased to subscribe, and ‘ pay twenty five pounds in the manner following for ‘ a pair of these globes, either for their own use, or to ‘ present them to any college in the universities, or a‘ ny public library or school, shall have his coat of arms, ‘ name, title, seat, or place of residence, &c. inserted ‘ in some convenient place of the globe.

‘ III. THAT every subscriber do at first pay down ‘ the sum of ten pounds, and fifteen pounds more upon ‘ the delivery of each pair of globes perfectly fitted up.
‘ And that the said globes be delivered within twelve ‘ months after the number of thirty subscribers be ‘ compleated; and that the subscribers be served with ‘ globes in the order in which they subscribed.

‘ IV. THAT a pair of these globes shall not hereaf‘ ter be sold to any person but the subscribers under ‘ thirty pounds.

‘ V. THAT if there be not thirty subscribers within ‘ four months, after the first of December 1712, the ‘ money paid shall be returned on demand by Mr John ‘ Warner, goldsmith near Temple bar, who shall re‘ ceive and pay the same according to the above men‘ tioned articles.

No. 553. Thursday, December 4.

Nec luisse pudet, sed non incidere ludum.

HOR. Ep. 14. l. i. v. 36.

*Nor do I blush to own my follies past,
But own those follies should no longer last.* FRANCIS.

THE project which I published on Monday last has brought me in several packets of letters. Among the rest I have received one from a certain projector, wherein, after having represented, that in all probability the solemnity of opening my mouth will draw together a great confluence of beholders, he proposes to me the hiring of Stationer's-hall for the more convenient exhibiting of that public ceremony. He undertakes to be at the charge of it himself, provided he may have the erecting of galleries on every side, and the letting of them out upon that occasion. I have a letter also from a bookseller, petitioning me in a very humble manner, that he may have the printing of the speech which I shall make to the assembly upon the first opening of my mouth. I am informed from all parts, that there are great canvassings in the several clubs about town, upon the chusing of a proper person to sit with me on those arduous affairs, to which I have summoned them. Three clubs have already proceeded to election, whereof one has made a double return. If I find that my enemies shall take advantage of my silence to begin hostilities upon me, or if any other exigency of affairs may so require, since I see elections in so great a forwardness, we may possibly meet before the day appointed; or if matters go on to my satisfaction, I may perhaps put off the meeting to a further day: but of this public notice shall be given.

In the mean time, I must confess that I am not a lit-am gratified and obliged by that concern which appears in this great city upon my present design of laying down this paper. It is likewise with much satisfaction, that I find some of the most outlying parts of the kingdom alarmed upon this occasion, having received letters to expostulate with me about it from several of my readers of the remotest boroughs of Great Britain. Among these I am very well pleased with a letter dated from Berwick upon Tweed, wherein my correspondent compares the office, which I have for some time executed in these realms, to the weeding of a great garden; which, says he, it is not sufficient to weed once for all, and afterwards to give over, but that the work must be continued daily, or the same spots of ground which are cleared for a while, will in a little time be over-run as much as ever. Another gentleman lays before me several enormities that are already sprouting, and which he believes will discover themselves in their full growth immediately after my disappearance. There is no doubt, says he, but the ladies heads will shoot up as soon as they know they are no longer under the Spectator's eye: and I have already seen such monstrous broad-brimmed hats under the arms of foreigners, that I question not but they will overshadow the island within a month or two after the dropping of your paper. But among all the letters which are come to my hands, there is none so handsomely written as the following one, which I am the more pleased with, as it is sent me from gentlemen who belong to a body which I shall always honour, and where (I cannot speak it without a secret pride) my speculations have met with a very kind reception. It is usual for poets, upon the publishing of their works, to print before them such copies of verses as have been made in their praise. Not that you must imagine they are pleased with their own commendations, but because the elegant compositions of their friends should not be lost. I must make the same apology for the publication of the ensuing letter, in which I have suppressed no part of those praises that are given my speculations with too lavish and good-natured a hand; tho' my correspondents can witness for me, that at other times I have generally blotted out those parts in the letters which I have received from them. O

Mr SPECTATOR,

Oxford, Nov. 15.

IN spite of your invincible silence, you have found out a method of being the most agreeable companion in the world: that kind of conversation which you hold with the town, has the good fortune of being always pleasing to the men of taste and leisure, and never offensive to those of hurry and business. You are never heard, but at what Horace calls dextro tempore, and have the happiness to observe the politic rule which the same discerning author gave his friend, when he enjoined him to deliver his book to Augustus;

Si validus, si latus erit, si denique poscet.

Ep. 13. l. 1. v. 3.

If Cæsar's high in health, in spirits gay,

Or if he ask'd to read th' unoffer'd lay. FRANCIS.

You never begin to talk, but when people are desirous to hear you; and I defy any one to be out of humour 'till you leave off. But I am led unawares into reflexions, foreign to the original design of this epistle; which was to let you know, that some unfeigned admirers of your inimitable papers, who could, without any flattery, greet you with the salutation used to the eastern monarchs, viz. O Spec, live for ever, have lately been under the same apprehensions with Mr Philo-Spec, that the haste you have made to dispatch your best friends portends no long duration to your own short visage. We could not, indeed, find any just grounds for complaint in the method you took to dissolve that venerable body: no, the world

‘ was not worthy of your Divine. WILL HONEYCOMB ‘ could not, with any reputation, live single any lon‘ ger. It was high time for the Templar to turn him‘ self to Coke, and Sir ROGER’s dying was the wisest ‘ thing he ever did in his life. It was however, mat‘ ter of great grief to us, to think that we were in dan‘ ger of losing so elegant and valuable an entertainment.
‘ And we could not, without sorrow, reflect that we ‘ were likely to have nothing to interrupt our sips in a ‘ morning, and to suspend our coffee in mid-air, be‘ tween our lips and our right-ear, but the ordinary ‘ trash of news-papers. We resolved therefore, not to ‘ part with you so. But since, to make use of your ‘ own allusion, the cherries began now to crowd the ‘ market, and their season was almost over, we consult‘ ed our future enjoyments, and endeavoured to make ‘ the exquisite pleasure that delicious fruit gave our ‘ taste as lasting as we could, and by drying them pro‘ tract their stay beyond its natural date. We own ‘ that thus they have not a flavour equal to that of ‘ their juicy bloom; but yet, under this disadvantage, ‘ they pique the palate, and become a salver better than ‘ any other fruit at its first appearance. To speak ‘ plain, there are a number of us who have begun your ‘ works afresh, and meet two nights in the week in or‘ der to give you a rehearing. We never come toge‘ ther without drinking your health, and as seldom part ‘ without general expressions of thanks to you for our ‘ night’s improvement. This we conceive to be a more ‘ useful institution than any other club whatever, not ‘ excepting even that of ugly faces. We have one ma‘ nifest advantage over that renowned society, with re‘ spect to Mr Spectator’s company. For though they ‘ may brag, that you sometimes make your personal ‘ appearance among them, it is impossible they should ‘ ever get a word from you. Whereas you are with us
‘ the reverse of what Phædria would have his mistress ‘ be in his rival’s company, present in your absence. We ‘ make you talk as much and as long as we please :

 ‘ and let me tell you, you seldom hold your tongue for ‘ the whole evening. I promise myself you will look ‘ with an eye of favour upon a meeting which owes its ‘ original to a mutual emulation among its members, ‘ who shall shew the most profound respect for your ‘ paper; not but we have a very great value for your ‘ person: and I dare say you can no where find four ‘ more sincere admirers, and humble servants, than

T. F. G. S. J. T. E. T.

No. 554. Friday, December 5.

—Tentanda via est, qua me quoque possim Tollere humo, victorque virum volitare per ora.

VIRG. Georg. 3. v. 9.

*New ways I must attempt my grov'ling name
 To raise aloft, and wing my flight to fame.* DRYDEN.

I AM obliged for the following essay, as well as for that which lays down rules out of Tully for pronunciation and action, to the ingenious author of a poem just published, intituled, An ode to the Creator of the world, occasioned by the fragments of Orpheus.

IT is a remark made, as I remember, by a celebrated French author, that no man ever pushed his capacity as far as it was able to extend. I shall not inquire whether this assertion be strictly true. It may suffice to say, that men of the greatest application and acquirements can look back upon many vacant spaces, and neglected parts of time, which have slipped away from them unemployed, and there is hardly any one considering person in the world, but is apt to fancy with himself, at some time or other, that if his life were to begin again, he could fill it up better.

THE mind is most provoked to cast on itself this ingenuous reproach, when the examples of such men are presented to it, as have far outshot the generality of their species, in learning, arts, or any valuable improvements.

ONE of the most extensive and improved geniuses we have had any instance of in our own nation, or in any other, was that of Sir Francis Bacon Lord Verulam. This great man, by an extraordinary force of nature, compass of thought, and indefatigable study, had amassed to himself such stores of knowledge as we cannot look upon without amazement. His capacity seems to have grasped all that was revealed in books before his time; and not satisfied with that, he began to strike out new tracks of science, too many to be travelled over by any one man in the compass of the longest life. These, therefore, he could only mark down, like imperfect coasting in maps, or supposed points of land, to be further discovered, and ascertained by the industry of after-ages, who should proceed upon his notices or conjectures.

THE excellent Mr Boyle was the person, who seems to have been designed by nature to succeed to the labours and inquiries of that extraordinary genius I have just mentioned. By innumerable experiments, he, in a great measure, filled up those plans and out-lines of science, which his predecessor had sketched out. His life was spent in the pursuit of nature, through a great variety of forms and changes and in the most rational, as well as devout adoration of its divine author.

It would be impossible to name many persons who have extended their capacities so far as these two, in the studies they pursued; but my learned readers, on this occasion, will naturally turn their thoughts to a third, who is yet living, and is likewise the glory of our own nation. The improvements which others had made in natural and mathematical knowledge have so vastly increased in his hand, as to afford at once a wonderful instance how great the capacity is of a human soul, and how inexhaustible the subject of its inquiries ; so true is that remark in holy writ, that though a wise man seek to find out the works of God from the beginning to the end, yet shall he not be able to do it.

I CANNOT help mentioning here one character more of a different kind indeed from these, yet such a one as may serve to shew the wonderful force of nature and of application, and is the most singular instance of an universal genius I have ever met with. The person I mean is Leonardo da Vinci, an Italian painter, descended from a noble family in Tuscany, about the beginning of the sixteenth century. In his profession of history-painting he was so great a master, that some have affirmed he excelled all who went before him. It is certain that he raised the envy of Michael Angelo, who was his contemporary, and that from the study of his works Raphael himself learned his best manner of designing. He was a master too in sculpture and architecture, and skilled in anatomy, mathematics, and mechanics. The aqueduct from the river Adda to Milan, is mentioned as a work of his contrivance. He had learned several languages, and was acquainted with the studies of history, philosophy, poetry, and music. Though it is not necessary to my present purpose, I cannot but take notice, that all who have writ of him mention likewise his perfections of body. The instances of his strength are almost incredible. He is described to have been of a well formed person, and a master of all genteel exercises. And lastly, we are told that his moral qualities were agreeable to his natural and intellectual endowments, and that he was of an honest and generous mind, adorned with great sweetness of manners. I might break off the account of him here, but I imagine it will be an entertainment to the curiosity of my readers, to find so remarkable a character distinguished by as remarkable a circumstance at his death. The fame of his works having gained him an universal esteem, he was invited to the court of France, where, after some time, he fell sick; and Francis the first coming to see him, he raised himself in his bed to acknowledge the honour which was done him by that visit. The king embraced him, and Leonardo fainting at the same instant, he expired in the arms of that great monarch.

It is impossible to attend to such instances as these, without being raised into a contemplation on the wonderful nature of an human mind, which is capable of such progressions in knowledge, and can contain such a variety of ideas without perplexity or confusion. How reasonable is it from hence to infer its divine original? and whilst we find unthinking matter endued with a natural power to last for ever, unless annihilated by omnipotence, how absurd would it be to imagine, that a being so much superior to it should not have the same privilege?

At the same time, it is very surprising, when we remove our thoughts from such instances as I have mentioned, to consider those we so frequently meet with in the accounts of barbarous nations, among the Indians; where we find numbers of people who scarce shew the first glimmerings of reason, and seem to have few ideas above those of sense and appetite. These, methinks, appear like large wilds, or vast uncultivated tracks of human nature; and when we compare them with men of the most exalted characters in arts and learning, we find it difficult to believe that they are creatures of the same species.

SOME are of opinion that the souls of men are all naturally equal, and that the great disparity, we so often observe, arises from the different organization or structure of the bodies to which they are united. But whatever constitutes this first disparity, the next great difference which we find between men in their several acquirements, is owing to accidental differences in their education, fortunes, or course of life. The soul is a kind of rough diamond, which requires art, labour, and time to polish it. For want of which, many a good natural genius is lost, or lies unfashioned, like a jewel in the mine.

ONE of the strongest incitements to excel in such arts and accomplishments as are in the highest esteem among men, is the natural passion which the mind of man has for glory; which, though it may be faulty in the excess of it, ought by no means to be discouraged. Perhaps some moralists are too severe in beating down this principle, which seems to be a spring implanted by nature to give motion to all the latent powers of the soul, and is always observed to exert itself with the greatest force in the most generous dispositions. The men whose characters have shone the brightest among the antient Romans, appear to have been strongly animated by this passion. Cicero, whose learning and services to his country are so well known, was enflamed by it to an extravagant degree, and warmly pressed Luceius, who was composing a history of those times, to be very particular and zealous in relating the story of his consulship; and to execute it speedily, that he might have the pleasure of enjoying in his life-time some part of the honour which he foresaw would be paid to his memory. This was the ambition of a great mind; but he is faulty in the degree of it, and cannot refrain from soliciting the historian upon this occasion to neglect the strict laws of history, and, in praising him, even to exceed the bounds of truth. The younger Pliny appears to have had the same passion for fame, but accompanied with greater chastness and modesty. His ingenuous manner of owning it to a friend, who had prompted him to undertake some great work, is exquisitely beautiful, and raises him to a certain grandeur above the imputation of vanity. I must confess, says he, that nothing employs my thoughts more than the desire I have of perpetuating my name; which in my opinion is a design worthy of a man, at least of such a one, who being conscious of no guilt, is not afraid to be remembred by posterity.

I THINK I ought not to conclude, without interesting all my readers in the subject of this discourse; I shall therefore lay it down as a maxim, That though all are not capable of shining in learning or the politer arts, yet every one is capable of excelling in something. The soul has in this respect a certain vegetative power which cannot lie wholly idle. If it is not laid out and cultivated into a regular and beautiful garden, it will of itself shoot up in weeds or flowers of a wilder growth.

No. 555. Saturday, December 6.

Respue quod non es—

PERS. Sat. 4. v. 51.

Lay the fictitious character aside.

ALL the members of the imaginary society, which were described in my first papers, having disappeared one after another, it is high time for the SPECTATOR himself to go off the stage. But, now I am to take my leave, I am under much greater anxiety than I have known for the work of any day since I undertook this province. It is much more difficult to converse with the world in a real than a personated character. That might pass for humour in the SPECTATOR, which would look like arrogance in a writer who sets his name to his work. The fictitious person might contemn those who disapproved him, and extol his own performances, without giving offence. He might assume a mock-authority, without being looked upon as vain and conceited. The praises or censures of himself fall only upon the creature of his imagination; and if any one finds fault with him, the author may reply with the philosopher of old, Thou dost but beat the case of Anaxarchus. When I speak in my own private sentiments, I cannot but address myself to my readers in a more submissive manner, and with a just gratitude, for the kind reception which they have given to these daily papers that have been published for almost the space of two years last past.

I HOPE the apology I have made as to the licence allowable to a feigned character, may excuse any thing which has been said in these discourses of the SPECTATOR and his works; but the imputation of the grossest vanity would still dwell upon me, if I did not give some account by what means I have been enabled to keep up the spirit of so long and approved a performance. All the papers marked with a C, an L, an I, or an O, that is to say, all the papers which I have distinguished by any letter in the name of the muse CLIO, were given me by the gentleman of whose assistance I formerly boasted in the preface and concluding leaf of my Tatlers. I am indeed much more proud of his long continued friendship, than I should be of the fame of being thought the author of any writings which he himself is capable of producing. I remember when I finished The Tender Husband, I told him there was nothing I so ardently wished, as that we might some time or other publish a work written by us both, which should bear the name of The Monument, in memory of our friendship. I heartily wish what I have done here, was as honorary to that sacred name, as learning, wit, and humanity, render those pieces which I have taught the reader how to distinguish for his. When the play above-mentioned was last acted, there were so many applauded strokes in it which I had from the same hand, that I thought very meanly of myself that I had never publicly acknowledged them. After I have put other friends upon importuning him to publish dramatic, as well as other writings he has by him, I shall end what I think I am obliged to say upon this head, by giving the reader this hint for the better judging of my productions, that the best comment upon them would be an account when the patron to The Tender Husband was in England, or abroad.

THE reader will also find some papers which are marked with the letter X, for which he is obliged to the ingenious gentleman who diverted the town with the epilogue to The Distressed Mother. I might have owned these several papers with the free consent of these gentlemen, who did not write them with a design of being known for the authors. But as a candid and sincere behaviour ought to be preferred to all other considerations, I would not let my heart reproach me with a consciousness of having acquired a praise which is not my right.

THE other assistances which I have had, have been conveyed by letters, sometimes by whole papers, and other times by short hints from unknown hands. I have not been able to trace favours of this kind, with any certainty, but to the following names, which I place in the order wherein I received the obligation; though the first I am going to name can hardly be mentioned in a list wherein he would not deserve the precedence. The persons to whom I am to make these acknowledgments are Mr Henry Martin, Mr Pope, Mr Hughes, Mr Carey of New-college in Oxford, Mr Tickell of Queen's in the same university, Mr Parnelle and Mr Eusden of Trinity in Cambridge. Thus, to speak in the language of my late friend Sir ANDREW FREEPOR T, I have balanced my accounts with all my creditors for wit and learning. But as these excellent performances would not have seen the light without the means of this paper, I may still arrogate to myself the merit of their being communicated to the public.

I HAVE nothing more to add, but having swelled this work to five hundred and fifty-five papers, they will be disposed into seven volumes, four of which are already published, and the three others in the press.

It will not be demanded of me why I now leave off, though I must own myself obliged to give an account to the town of my time hereafter? since I retire when their partiality to me is so great, that an edition of the former volumes of Spectators, of above nine thousand each book, is already sold off; and the tax on each half-sheet has brought into the stamp-office, one week with another, above 20*l.* a-week, arising from this single paper, notwithstanding it at first reduced it to less than half the number that was usually printed before this tax was laid.

I HUMBLY beseech the continuance of this inclination to favour what I may hereafter produce, and hope I have in my occurrences of life tasted so deeply of pain and sorrow, that I am proof against much more prosperous circumstances than any advantages to which my own industry can possibly exalt me.

I am,

My good-natured reader,

Your most obedient,

Most obliged humble servant,

RICHARD STEELE.

Vos valete et plaudite. Ter.

THE following letter regards an ingenious set of gentlemen, who have done me the honour to make me one of their society.

Mr SPECTATOR,

Dec. 4. 1712.

‘ THE academy of Painting, lately established in ‘ London, have done you and themselves the ‘ honour to chuse you one of their directors; that ‘ noble and lively art, which before was intitled to ‘ your regards as a SPECTATOR, has an additional ‘ claim to you and you seem to be under a double ob‘ ligation to take some care of her interests.

‘ THE honour of our country is also concerned in ‘ the matter I am going to lay before you: we (and ‘ perhaps other nations as well as we) have a nation‘ al false humanity as well as a national vain glory;

‘ and though we boast ourselves to excel all the world ‘ in things wherein we are out-done abroad, in other ‘ things we attribute to others a superiority which we ‘ ourselves possess. This is what is done, particular‘ ly in the art of Portrait or Face-painting.

‘ PAINTING is an art of vast extent, too great by ‘ much for any mortal man to be in full possession of,
‘ in all its parts; ’tis enough if any one succeed in ‘ painting faces, history, battles, landskips, sea pieces, ‘ fruit, flowers, or drolls, &c. Nay, no man ever was ‘ excellent in all the branches (though many in num‘ ber) of these several arts; for a distinct art I take ‘ upon me to call every one of those kinds of painting.

‘ AND as one man may be a good landskip painter, ‘ but unable to paint a face or a history tolerably ‘ well, and so of the rest; one nation may excel in ‘ some kinds of painting, and other kinds may thrive ‘ better in other climates.

‘ ITALY may have the preference of all other nati‘ ons for history painting; Holland for drolls, and a ‘ neat finished manner of working; France for gay, ‘ janty, fluttering pictures; and England for portraits:
‘ but to give the honour of every one of these kinds of ‘ painting to any one of those nations, on account of ‘ their excellence in any of these parts of it, is like ad-‘ judging the prize of heroic, dramatic, lyric or bur‘ lesque poetry, to him who has done well in any one ‘ of them.

‘ WHERE there are the greatest geniuses, and most ‘ helps and encouragements, ’tis reasonable to suppose ‘ an art will arrive to the greatest perfection: by this ‘ rule let us consider our own country with respect to ‘ face-painting. No nation in the world delights so ‘ much in having their own, or friends, or relations ‘ pictures; whether from their national good-nature,

‘ or having a love to painting, and not being encour‘ aged in the great article of religious pictures, which ‘ the purity of our worship refuses the free use of, or ‘ from whatever other cause. Our helps are not in‘ ferior to those of any other people, but rather they ‘ are greater; for what the antique statues and bas‘ reliefs which Italy enjoys are to the history-paint‘ ers, the beautiful and noble faces with which Eng‘ land is confessed to abound, are to face-painters;
‘ and besides we have the greatest number of the works ‘ of the best masters in that kind of any people, not ‘ without a competent number of those of the most ‘ excellent in every other part of painting. And for ‘ encouragement, the wealth and generosity of the ‘ English nation affords that in such a degree, as ar‘ tists have no reason to complain.

‘ AND accordingly, in fact, face painting is no where ‘ so well performed as in England: I know not whe‘ ther it has lain in your way to observe it, but I have,
‘ and pretend to be a tolerable judge. I have seen ‘ what is done abroad, and can assure you that the ‘ honour of that branch of painting is justly due to us.
‘ I appeal to the judicious observers for the truth of ‘ what I assert. If foreigners have oftentimes, or e‘ ven for the most part, excelled our natives, it ought ‘ to be imputed to the advantages they have met with ‘ here, joined to their own ingenuity and industry; ‘ nor has any one nation distinguished themselves so ‘ as to raise an argument in favour of their country:
‘ but it is to be observed that neither French nor Ita‘ lians, nor any one of either nation, notwithstanding ‘ all our prejudices in their favour, have, or ever had,
‘ for any considerable time, any character among us ‘ as face-painters.

‘ THIS honour is due to our own country: and has ‘ been so for near an age; so that, instead of going to ‘ Italy, or elsewhere, one that designs for portrait-‘ painting ought to study in England. Hither such

• should come from Holland, France, Italy, Germany,
• &c. as he that intends to practise any other kinds of • painting should go to those parts where it is in great• est perfection. 'Tis said the blessed virgin descend• ed from heaven to sit to St Luke; I dare venture to • affirm, that if she should desire another Madonna to
• be painted by the life, she would come to England;
• and am of opinion that your present president, Sir
• Godfrey Kneller, from his improvement since he ar• rived in this kingdom, would perform that office bet• ter than any foreigner living. I am, with all pos• sible respect,

S I R,

Your most humble and Most obedient servant, &c.

THE ingenious letter signed the Weather-glass, with several others, were received, but came too late.

P O S T S C R I P T.

IT had not come to my knowledge, when I left off the SPECTATOR, that I owe several excellent sentiments and agreeable pieces in this work to Mr Ince of Gray's Inn.

R. STEELE.

Q 2

T H E I N D E X.

The figures refer to the numbers of the papers.

A

Action, a necessary qualification in an orator 541. Tully's observations on action adapted to the British theatre ib.

Actor, absent, who so called by Theophrastus 541.

Advice usually received with reluctance 512.

Afflictions, how to be alleviated 501.

Allegories: the reception the Spectator's allegorical writings meet with from the public 501.

Anatomy: the Spectator's speculations on it 543.

Arm (the) called by Tully the orator's weapon 541.

Art, the design of it 541.

Audience, the gross of an audience of whom composed 502. The vicious taste of our English audiences ib.

Augustus, his reproof to the Roman batchelors 528.

Authors, their precedency settled according to the bulk of their works 529.

B

Bacon, (Sir Francis) his extraordinary learning and parts 554.

Bamboo (Benjamin) the philosophical use he resolves to make of a shrew of a wife 482.

Beauty, the force of it 510.

Beings: the scale of Beings considered by the Spectator 519.

Biting, a kind of mungrel wit, described and exploded by the Spectator 504.

Biton and Clitobus, their story related, and applied by the Spectator 483.

Body (human) the work of a transcendently wise and powerful Being 543.

C

Calamities not to be distinguished from blessings 483.

Campbell (Mr) the dumb fortune-teller, an extraordinary person 474.

Cato, the grounds for his belief of the immortality of the soul 537.

Celibacy, the great evil of the nation 528.

Charity, the great want of it among Christians 516.

Castity of renown, what 480.

Children, a multitude of them, one of the blessings of the married state 500.

Cicero, the great Roman orator, his extraordinary superstition 505. and desire of glory 554.

Clarendon (Lord) a reflexion of that historian's 485.

Clubs, the institution and use of them 474.

Coffee house debates seldom regular, or methodical 476. Coffee house liars, two sorts of them 521.

Comfort, an attendant on patience 501.

Contemplation, the way to the mountain of the Muses, 514.

Cot queans, described by a lady who has one for her husband 482.

Ceverley (Sir Roger de) an account of his death brought to the Spectator's club 517. His legacies ib.

I N D E X.

Country life, a scheme of it 474.

Country wake, a farce, commended by the Spectator, 502.

D

DApperwit (Tom) his opinion of matrimony 482. recommended by Will Honeycomb to succeed him in the Spectator's club 530.

Diagoras, the atheist, his behaviour to the Athenians in a storm 483.

Dionysius, a club tyrant 508.

Dogget the comedian, for what commended by the Spectator 502.

Dreams, in what manner considered by the Spectator 487. The folly of laying any stress upon, or drawing consequences from our dreams 505. The multitude of dreams sent to the Spectator 524.

Dry (Will) a man of a clear head but few words 476.

E

EMbellishers what persons so called 521.

Epictetus, the philosopher, his advice to dreamers 524.

Epistles recommendatory, the injustice and absurdity of most of them 493.

Essays, wherein differing from methodical discourses 476.

F

FAbles, the great usefulness and antiquity of them 512.

Fairs for buying and selling of women, customary among the Persians 511.

Fancy the daughter of liberty 514.

Fashions; the vanity of them, wherein beneficial 478. A repository proposed to be built for them ib. The balance of fashions leans on the side of France

ib. The evil influence of fashion on the married state 490.

Fashionable society (a board of directors of the) proposed, with the requisite qualifications of the members 478.

Fools naturally mischievous 485.

Frankair (Charles) a powerful and successful speaker, 484.

Freeport (Sir Andrew) his resolution to retire from business 549.

French much addicted to grimace 481

Friendship, a necessary ingredient in the married state 490, preferred by Spencer to love and natural affection ib.

G

GArden, the innocent delights of one 477. What part of the garden at Kensington to be most admired ib. In what manner gardening may be compared to poetry ib.

Gladness of heart to be moderated and restrained, but not banished by virtue 494.

God, an instance of his exuberant goodness and mercy 519. A Being of infinite perfections 513

H

HAiris (Mr) the organ builder, his proposal 552.

Heads, never the wiser for being bald 497.

Heraclitus, a remarkable saying of his 487.

Herodotus, wherein condemned by the Spectator 483.

Hobson (Tobias) the Cambridge carrier, the first man in England who let out hackney horses 509.

His justice in his employment, and the success of it ib.

Honeycomb (Will) resolved not to marry without the advice of his friends, 475. His translation from the French of an epigram written by Martial, in honour of the beauty of his wife Cleopatra 490. His letters to the

I N D E X.

Spectator 499, 511. Marries a country girl 530.

Hope, the folly of it when misemployed on temporal objects 535. instanced in the fable of Alnaschar the Persian glass man ib.

Horace, his recommendatory letter to Claudius Nero in behalf of his friend Septimius 493.

Humanity, not regarded by the fine gentlemen of the age 520.

Husband, a fond one described 479.

Hymen, a revengeful deity 530.

J

Jews, considered by the Spectator, in relation to their number, dispersion, and adherence to their religion 495. and the reasons assigned for it ib. The veneration paid by them to the name of GOD 531.

Independent minister, the behaviour of one at his examination of a scholar, who was in election to be admitted into a college of which he was governor 494.

Ingratitude, a vice inseparable to a lustful mind 491.

Instinct, the several degrees of it in several different animals 519.

Invention the most painful action of the mind 487.

Justice, to be esteemed as the first quality in one who is in a post of power and direction 479.

L

Laughter, the distinguishing faculty in man 494.

Learning highly necessary to a man of fortune 506.

Leo X. a great lover of buffoons and coxcombs 497. In what manner reproved for it by a priest, ib.

Letters to the Spectator; from J. R. complaining of his neighbours, and the turn of their conversation in the country, 474. from Dulcibella Thankley, who wants a direction to Mr Campbell the dumb fortune teller ib. from B. D. desiring the Spectator's advice in a weighty affair 476. from . . . containing a description of his garden 477. from A. B. with a dissertation on fashions, and a proposal for a building for the use of them 478. from Monsieur Chezly to Pharamond 480. to the Spectator from . . . a clerk to a lawyer ib. from . . . being a lady married to a cot quean 482. from . . . with a dissertation on modesty 484. from . . . containing reflexions on the powerful effects of trifles and trifling persons 485. from a handsome black man, two pair of stairs in the paper buildings in the Temple, who rivals a handsome fair man up one pair of stairs in the same building 485. from Robin Shorter, with a postscript ib. from . . . with an account of the unmarried henpecked, and a vindication of the married 486. from . . . with an epigram on the Spectator by Mr Tate 488. from . . . with some reflexions on the ocean, considered both in a calm and a storm, and a divine ode on that occasion 489. from Matilda Mohair, at Tunbridge, complaining of the disregard she meets with, on account of her strict virtue from the men, who take more notice of the romps and coquettes than the rigids 492. from L. B. complaining of the behaviour of some fathers towards their eldest sons 496. from Rachel Shoofring, Sarah Trice, an humble servant unknown, and Alice Blue garter, in answer to that from Matilda Mohair, who is with child, and has crooked legs ib. from Moses Greenbag, the lawyer giving an account of some new brothers of the whip, who have chambers in the Temple 498. from Will Honeycomb, with his dream intended for a spectator 499. from Philogamus in commendation of the married state 500. from Ralph Wonder, complaining of the behaviour of an unknown lady at a parish church near the Bridge 503. from Titus Trophonius, an interpreter of dreams 505. from . . . complaining of the oppression and injustice observed in the rules of all clubs and meetings 508. from Hezekiah Thrift, containing a discourse on trade 509. from Will Honeycomb, occasioned by two stories he had met with relating to a sale of women in Persia and China 511. from the Spectator's clergyman, being a thought in sickness 513. from . . . with a vision of Parnassus 514. from . . . with two inclosed, one from a celebrated town coquette, to her friend newly married in the country, and her friend's answer 515. from Edward Biscuit, Sir Roger de Coverley's butler, with an account of his master's death 517. from . . . condoling with him on Sir Roger's death, with some remarkable epitaphs 518. from Tom Tweer, on physiognomy, &c. ib. from F. J. a widower, with some thoughts on a man's behaviour in that condition 520. from . . . a great enemy to public report 521. from T. W. a man of prudence, to his mistress 522. To the Spectator, from B. T. a sincere lover; to the same ib. from . . . dated from Glasgow in Scotland, with a vision 524. from Pliny, to his wife's aunt Hispulla 525. from Moses Greenbag to the Spectator, with a further account of some gentlemen brothers of the whip 526. from Philognotes giving an account of the ill effects of the visit he paid to a female married relation 527. from . . . who had made his mistress a present of a fan, with a copy of verses on that occasion ib. from Rachel Wellady a virgin of twenty three, with a heavy complaint against the men 528. from Will Honeycomb lately married to a country girl, who has no portion, but a great deal of virtue 530. from Mr Pope, on the verses spoken by the Emperor Adrian upon his death-bed 532. from Dustereraftus, whose parents will not let him choose a wife for himself 533. from Penance Cruel, complaining of the behaviour of persons who travelled with her in a stage coach out of Essex to London ib. from Sharlot Wealthy, setting forth the hard case of such women as are beauties and fortunes 534. from Abraham Dapperwit, with the Spectator's answer ib. from Jeremy Comfit, a grocer, who is in hopes of growing rich by losing his customers ib. from Lucinda Parley, a coffee-house idol ib. from C. B. recommending knotting as a proper amusement to the beaux 536. from . . . a shoeing horn ib. from Relicta Lovely, a widow 539. from Eustace, in love with a lady of eighteen whose parents think her too young to marry by three years ib. from . . . complaining of a young divine who murdered Archbishop Tillotson's sermon upon evil-speaking ib. from . . . with a short critic on Spencer 540. from Philo-Spec, who apprehends a dissolution of the Spectator's club, and the ill consequences of it, 542. from Captain Sentry, lately come to the possession of Sir Roger de Coverley's estate 544. from the Emperor of China to the Pope 545. from W. C. to the Spectator, in commendation of a generous benefactor 546.

 from Charles Easy, setting forth the sovereign use of the Spectators in several remarkable instances 547. from . . . on poetical justice 548. from Sir Andrew Freeport, who is retiring from business 549. from Philo-nicus, a litigious gentleman, complaining of some unpolite law-terms 551. from T. F. G.
 S. J. T. E. T. in commendation of the Spectator 553.

London (Mr) the gardener, an heroic poet 477.

Love, the capriciousness of it 475.
 the romantic stile in which it is made 479. a nice and fickle passion 506. a method proposed to preserve it alive after marriage ib.

Lying, the malignity of it 507.
 Party-lying, the prevalency of it ib.

Lyfander, his character 522.

M.

MAN, by what chiefly distinguished from all other creatures 494. suffers more from imaginary than real evils 505. His subjection to the female sex 510.
 wonderful in his nature 519.

Married condition rarely unhappy but from want of judgment or temper in the husband 479.
 the advantages of it preferable to a single state ib. and 500, termed purgatory by Tom Dapperwit 482. the excellence of its institution 490. the pleasure and uneasiness of married persons, to what imputed 506. the foundation of community 522. for what reason liable to so much ridicule ib. some farther thoughts of the Spectator on that subject 525.

Matter the basis of animals 519.

Men of the town rarely make good husbands 522.

Method, the want of it, in whom only supportable 476. the use and necessity of it in writings ib.

 seldom found in coffee house debates ib.

Mind (human) the wonderful nature of it 554.

Misfortunes, our judgments upon them reprov'd 483.

Modesty, an unnecessary virtue in the professors of the law 484.
 the sentiments entertained of it by the ancients ib. Rules recommended to the modest man by the Spectator ib.

Moorfields, by whom resorted to 505.

Motteux (Peter) dedicates his poem on tea to the Spectator 552.

N

NEmesis, an old maid, a great discoverer of judgments 483.

P

PAssion relieved by itself 520.

Parnassus, the vision of it 514.

Patience, an allegorical discourse upon it 501.

Philips (Mr) his pastorals recommended by the Spectator 523.

Pisistratus, the Athenian tyrant, his generous behaviour on a particular occasion 527.

Plato, his description of the supreme being 507.

Players, wherein to be condemned 502. the precedence settled among them 529.

Pliny: the necessary qualifications of a fine speaker according to that author 424. His letter to his wife's aunt Hispulla 525.

Plutarch, for what reprov'd by the Spectator 483.

Pope (Mr) his miscellany recommended by the Spectator 523.

Praise, when changed into fame 551.

Prediction, the many arts of it in use among the vulgar 505.

Prerogative, when and how to be asserted with honour 480.

I N D E X.

Pronunciation, necessary to an orator 541.

Prospect of peace, a poem on that subject commended by the Spectator, 523.

Punning, by whom affected 504.

Punsters, their talents ib.

Puzzle (Tom) a most eminent immethodical disputant 476.

R

Raleigh (Sir Walter) his opinion of womankind 510.

Religion, a morose melancholy behaviour, which is observed in several precise professors of it, reproved by the Spectator 494. the true spirit of it not only composes, but cheers the soul ib.

Repository for fashions, a building proposed and described 487. the usefulness of it ib.

Rhynsault, the unjust governor, in what manner punished by Charles duke of Burgundy, his sovereign 491.

Romans: an instance of the general good understanding of the antient Romans 502.

Rowley (Mr) his proposals for a new pair of globes 552.

S

Sense, the different degrees of it, in the several different species of animals 519.

Sentry (Captain) takes possession of his uncle Sir Roger de Coverley's estate 517.

Shoeing horns, who, and by whom employed 536.

Sickness, a thought on it 513.

Sly (John) the tobacconist, his representation to the Spectator 532. his minute 534.

Socrates, head of the sect of the hen peck'd 479. his domestics, what 486. The effect a discourse of his on marriage had with his audience 500.

Soul, the excellency of it considered in relation to dreams 487.

Sparkish (Will.) a modish husband 479.

Spectator, his account of a coffee-house debate, relating to the difference between Count Rechen-teren and Monsieur Mesnager 481. the different sense of his readers upon the rise of his paper, and the Spectator's proposals upon it 488. his observations on our modern poems 523. his edict ib. the effects of his discourses on marriage ib. his deputation to John Sly, haberdasher of hats and tobacconist 526. the different judgments of his readers concerning his speculations 542. his reasons for often casting his thoughts into a letter ib. his prospect for the forming a new club 550. visits Mr Motteux's warehouses 552. the great concern the city is in upon his design of laying down his paper 553. he takes his leave of the town 555.

Squires (rural) their want of learning 529.

Stripes, the use of them on perverse wives 479.

Surprise, the life of stories 538.

Swingers, a set of familiar romps at Tunbridge 492.

T

Terence, the Spectator's observations on one of his plays, 502.

Thrash (Will) and his wife, an insipid couple 522.

Tickle (Mr) his verses to the Spectator 532.

Titles, the significancy and abuse of them 480.

Tom Trusty, a tender husband, and careful father 479.

Toper (Jack) his commendatory letter in behalf of a servant 493.

Travellers, the generality of them exploded 474.

Truth, the excellence of it 507.

I N D E X.

Turner (Sir William) his excellent maxim 509.

Tyrants, why so called 508.

V

Vinci (Leonardo) his many accomplishments, and remarkable circumstance at his death 554.

Virtue, the use of it in our afflictions 520.

W

Wealth, the father of love 506.
Wedlock, the state of it ridiculed by the town wittlings 525.

Wife, the most delightful name in nature 490.

Winter gardens recommended and described 477.

William III. king of England, compared with the French king 516

Wife (Mr.) the gardener, an heroic poet 477.

Wit may purchase riches, but is not to be purchased by riches 522.

Wits minor, the several species of them 504. Wits ought not to pretend to be rich 509.

Wives (perverse) how to be managed 479.

Women greater tyrants to their lovers than husbands 485. reproved for their neglect of dress after they are married 506. their wonderful influence upon the other sex 510.

World of matter and life considered by the Spectator 519.

The End of the SEVENTH VOLUME.

The Spectator in eight volumes

Bd.: 7

London 1765

Regensburg, Staatliche Bibliothek -- 999/Hist.pol.5251(7) urn:nbn:de:bvb:12-bsb11300407-6